

COOKSBOROUGH

F.

F A B

F, A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Scaliger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Islandick alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

FABACIOUS. adj. [fabacius, Latin.] Having the nature of a bean. Diſt.

FABLE. n. f. [fable, French; fabula, Latin.]
1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept. Jotham's fable of the bees is the oldest extant, and as beautiful as any made since. Addison's Spectator.

2. A fiction in general.
Triptolemus, so sung the nine,
Strew'd plenty from his cart divine;
But, spite of all those fable makers,
He never sow'd on Almain acres. Dryden.

3. A vicious or foolish fiction.
But refuse profane and old wives fables. Tim. iv. 7.
4. The series or contexture of events which constitute a poem epick or dramatick.

The moral is the first business of the poet: this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The first thing to be considered in an epick poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect, according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so. Addison's Spectator.

5. A lye. This sense is merely familiar.

To FABLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction.
That Saturn's sons receiv'd the three-fold reign
Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath,
Old poets mention, fabling. Prior.
Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell,
That wav'ring conquest still desires to rove!
In Marlbro's camp the goddess knows to dwell. Prior.

2. To tell falsehoods; to lye.

He fables not: I hear the enemy. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

To FABLE. v. a. To feign; to tell of falsity.

We mean to win,
Or turn this heav'n itself into the hell
Thou fableſt. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 292.
Ladies of th' Hesperides, that seem'd
Fairer than feign'd of old, or fabl'd since
Of fairy daniels met in forest wide,
By knights. Milton's Paradise Lost.

FABLED. adj. [from fable.] Celebrated in fables.
Hail, fabled grotto! hail, Elysian soil!
Thou fairest spot of fair Britannia's isle! Tickell.

FABLER. n. f. [from fable.] A dealer in fictions; a writer of feigned stories.

To FABRICATE. v. a. [fabricar, Latin.]

1. To build; to construct.

2. To forge; to devise falsely. This sense is retained among the Scottish lawyers; for when they suspect a paper to be forged, they say it is fabricate.

FABRICATION. n. f. [from fabricate.] The act of building; construction.

This fabrication of the human body is the immediate work of a vital principle, that formeth the first rudiments of the human nature. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FABRICK. n. f. [fabrica, Latin.]

1. A building; an edifice.

There must be an exquisite care to place the columns, set in several stories, most precisely one over another, that so the solid may answer to the solid, and the vacuities to the vacuities, as well for beauty as strength of the fabrick. Watson.

2. Any system or compages of matter; any body formed by the conjunction of dissimilar parts.

Still will ye think it strange,
That all the parts of this great fabrick change;
Quit their old station and primeval frame. Prior.

F A C

To FABRICK. v. a. [from the noun.] To build; to form; to construct.

Shew what laws of life
The cheefe inhabitants observe, and how Fabrick their manions. Phillips.

FABULIST. n. f. [fabuliste, French.] A writer of fables.
Quitting Elop and the fabulists, he copies from Boccace. Coxal.

Our bard's a fabulist, and deals in fiction. Garrick.

FABULOSITY. n. f. [fabulositas, Latin.] Lyingness; fulness of stories; fabulous invention.

In their fabulosity they would report, that they had observations for twenty thousand years. Abbot's Description of the World.

FABULOUS. adj. [fabulosus, Latin.] Feigned; full of fables, or invented tales.

A person terrified with the imagination of spectres, is more reasonable than one who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous and groundless. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 110.

FABULOUSLY. adv. [from fabulous.] In fiction; in a fabulous manner.

There are many things fabulously delivered, and are not to be accepted as truths. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 8.

FACE. n. f. [face, French, from facies, Latin.]

1. The visage.

The children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses's face shone. Exod. xxxiv. 35.

A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find good; but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon, Essay 44.

From beauty still to beauty ranging,
In ev'ry face I found a dart. Addison's Spectator.

2. Countenance; cast of the features; look; air of the face.

Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I!
Who can't be silent, and who will not lye:
To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave, exceeds all pow'r of face. Pope's Epistles.

3. The surface of any thing.

A mist watered the whole face of the ground. Gen. ii. 6.

4. The front or forepart of any thing.

The breadth of the face of the house, towards the East, was an hundred cubits. Ezek. xli. 14.

5. Appearance; resemblance.

Keep still your former face, and mix again
With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with 'em;
For such are treasons. Ben. Johnson.

At the first shock, with blood and powder stain'd,
Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd;
Fury and art produce effects so strange,
They trouble nature, and her visage change. Waller.

His dialogue has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference. Baker.

6. Presence; sight.

Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall lay her before his face. Numb. xix. 3.

7. Confidence; boldness.

Thinking, by this face,
To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so. Shakeſpeare's Julius Caesar.

How many things are there which a man cannot, with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them: a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg.

You'll find the thing will not be done
With ignorance and face alone. Hudibras, p. ii.

You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have certainly stolen.

L'Estrange, Fable 415.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations.

8. Distortion of the face.

Shame itself!

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

FACE to FACE. [An adverbial expression.]

1. When both parties are present.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have his accusers face to face.

Acts xxv. 16.

2. Nakedly; without the interposition of other bodies.

Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face.

1 Cor. xiii. 12.

TO FACE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To carry a false appearance; to play the hypocrite.

Thou needs must learn to laugh, to lye,

To face, to forge, to scoff, to company. Habberd's Tale.

2. To turn the face; to come in front.

Face about, man; you a soldier, and afraid of the enemy!

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Then thrice the mounted squadrons ride around

The fire, and Arctic's name they thrice refund;

Hail and farewell they shouted thrice amain,

Thrice facing to the left, and thence they turn'd again. Dry.

TO FACE. v. a.

1. To meet in front; to oppose with confidence and firmness.

I'll face

This tempest, and deserve the name of king. Dryden.

We get intelligence of the force of the enemy, and cast about for a sufficient number of troops to face the enemy in the field of battle.

Addison on the War.

They are as loth to see the fires kindled in Smithfield as his lordship; and, at least, as ready to face them under a popish persecution.

Swift.

2. To oppose with impudence.

We trapan'd the state, and fac'd it down

With pious and projects of our own. Hudibras, p. iii. c. 2.

Because he walk'd against his will,

He fac'd men down that he stood still. Prior.

3. To stand opposite to.

On one side is the head of the emperor Trajan; the reverse has on it the circus Maximus, and a view of the side of the Palatine mountain that faces it.

Addison on Italy.

The temple is described to be square, and the four fronts with open gates, facing the different quarters of the world.

Pope's Temple of Fame.

4. To cover with an additional superficies; to invest with a covering.

The whole fortification of Soleurre is faced with marble.

Georgione, the cotemporary of Titian, excelled in portraits or facepainting.

Dryden's Dufresny.

FACEY. n. f. [facette, French.] A small surface; a superficies cut into several angles.

Honour that is gained and broken upon another, hath the quickest reflection, like diamonds cut with facets.

Bacon.

FACTIOUS. adj. [factieux, French; factiosus, Lat.] Gay; cheerful; lively; merry; witty. It is used both of persons and sentiments.

Socrates, informed of some derogating speeches used of him behind his back, made this factious reply, Let him beat me too when I am absent.

Government of the Tongue, f. 6.

FACTIOUSLY. adv. [from factious.] Gayly; cheerfully; wittily; merrily.

FACTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from factious.] Cheerful wit; mirth; gaiety.

FACTILE. adj. [facile, French; facilis, Latin.]

1. Easy; not difficult; performable or attainable with little labour.

Then also those poets, which are now counted most hard, will be both facile and pleasant.

Milton on Education.

To confine the imagination is as facile a performance as the Goteham's design of hedging in the cuckoo.

Glanv. Stapf.

By dividing it into parts so distinct, the order in which they shall find each disposed, will render the work facile and delightful.

Evelyn's Kalendar.

This may at first seem perplexed with many difficulties, yet many things may be fuggelted to make it more facile and commodious.

Wilkins's Math. Magic.

2. Easily surmountable; easily conquerable.

3. Easy of access or converse; not haughty; not supercilious; not austere.

I meant she should be courteous, facile, sweet,

Hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride;

I meant each softest virtue there should meet,

Fit in that softer bosom to reside. Ben. Johnson's Epigrams.

Raphael now, to Adam's doubt propos'd,

Benevolent and facile, thus reply'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. Pliant; flexible; easily persuaded to good or bad; ductile to a fault.

Too facile then, thou did'st not much gain say;

Since Adam and his facile comfort Eve

Lost Paradise, deceiv'd by me. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

Some men are of that facile temper, that they are wrought upon by every object they converse with, whom any affectionate discourse, or serious sermon, or any notable accident, shall put into a fit of religion, which yet usually lasts no longer than till somewhat else comes in their way.

Calamy.

TO FACILITATE. v. a. [facilitare, French.] To make easy; to free from difficulty; to clear from impediments.

Choice of the likeliest and best prepared metal for the version will facilitate the work.

Bacon's Natural History.

They renewed their assault two or three days together, and planted cannon to facilitate their passage, which did little hurt; but they still lost many men in the attempt.

Clarendon, b. viii.

Though perspective cannot be called a certain rule, or a finishing of the picture, yet it is a great succour and relief to art, and facilitates the means of execution.

Dryden's Dufresny.

What produceth a due quantity of animal spirits, necessarily facilitates the animal and natural motions.

Arbutnot on Diet.

A war on the side of Italy would cause a great diversion of the French forces, and facilitate the progress of our arms in Spain.

Swift.

FACILITY. n. f. [facilitas, French; facilitas, Latin.]

1. easiness to be performed; freedom from difficulty.

Yet reason faith, reason should have ability

To hold these worldly things in such proportion,

As let them come or go with even facility. Sidney, b. ii.

Piety could not be diverted from this to a more commodious business by any motives of profit or facility.

Raleigh.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, both in point of religion and in point of honour; though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice.

Bacon's Holy War.

2. Readiness in performing; dexterity.

They who have studied have not only learned many excellent things, but also have acquired a great facility of profiting themselves by reading good authors.

Dryden's Dufresny.

The facility which we get of doing things, by a custom of doing, makes them often pass in us without our notice.

Locke.

3. Vicious ductility; easiness to be persuaded to good or bad; to ready compliance.

Facility is worse than bribery; for bribes come now and then: but if importunity or idle respects lead a man, he shall never be without.

Bacon, Essay 11.

'Tis a great error to take facility for good-nature; tenderness, without discretion, is no better than a more pardonable folly.

L'Estrange, Fable 30.

4. easiness of access; complaisance; condescension; affability.

He opens and yields himself to the man of business with difficulty and reluctance; but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of appetite and desire.

South's Sermons.

FACINEROUS. adj. [corrupted by Shakespeare from facinorosus; facinus, facinoris, Latin.] Wicked; facinorous.

'Tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and tedious of it; and he's of a most facinorous spirit that will not acknowledge it.

Shakespeare, All's well that ends well.

FA'cing. n. f. [from 'tis face.] An ornamental covering; that which is put on the outside of anything by way of decoration.

These offices and dignities were but the facings and fringes of his greatness.

Watson.

FACINOROUS. adj. [facinora, Latin.] Wicked; atrocious; detestably bad.

FACINOROUSNESS. n. f. [from facinorous.] Wickedness in a high degree.

FACT. n. f. [factum, Latin.]

1. A thing done; an effect produced; something not barely supposed or suspected, but really done.

In matter of fact there is some credit to be given to the testimony of man; but not in matter of opinion and judgement: we see the contrary both acknowledged and universally practised also throughout the world.

Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

As men are not to mistake the causes of these operations, so much less are they to mistake the fact or effect, and rashly to take that for done which is not done.

Bacon's Nat. History.

Matter of fact breaks out and blazes with too great evidence to be denied.

South's Sermons.

2. Reality; not supposition; not speculation.

Those

FAC

Those effects which are wrought by the percussion of the sense, and by things in fact, are produced likewise in some degree by the imagination: therefore if a man see another cat four or acid things, which set the teeth on edge, that object tainteth the imagination. Bacon's Natural History, No. 795.

If this were true in fact, I do not see any colour for such a conclusion.

Addison on the State of the War.

Manifest sins, though in speculation they may be separable from war, in reality and fact never fail to attend it. Smalbridge.

3. Action; deed.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws

Of nature, pleading in his children's cause:

Howe'er the doubtful fact is understood,

'Tis love of honour and his country's good;

The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryden.

FACTION. n. f. [faction, French; factio, Latin.]

1. A party in a state.

The queen is valued thirty thousand strong;

If she hath time to breathe, be well assur'd

Her faction will be full as strong as ours. Shakef. Henry VI.

He has been known to commit outrages.

Shakespeare's Timon.

Their hatred went so far, that by one of Simon's faction murders were committed.

Mac. iv. 9.

By the weight of reason I should counterpoise the overbalancings of any factions.

King Charles.

They remained at Newbery in great faction among themselves.

Clarendon.

FACTIONARY. n. f. [factionnaire, French.] One of a faction; a party man. A word not in use.

Prythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius; always factious of the party of your general. Shakef. Coriolanus.

FACTIONOUS. adj. [factiosus, French.]

1. Given to faction; loud and violent in a party; publickly dissension; addicted to form parties and raise publick disturbances.

He is a traitor; let him to the Tower,

And crop away that factious pate of his. Shakef. Hen. VI.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs. Shak. Jul. Caesar.

2. Proceeding from publick dissensions; tending to publick discord.

Grey-headed men and graves, with warriors mix'd,

Assemble; and harangues are heard; but soon

In faction opposition. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 664.

Factious tumults overbore the freedom and honour of the two houses.

Boyle.

Why these factious quarrels, controversies, and battles amongst themselves, when they were all united in the same design?

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

FACTIONOUSLY. adv. [from factious.] In a manner criminally dissensionous or tumultuous.

I intended not only to oblige my friends, but mine enemies also; exceeding even the desires of those that were factiously discontented.

King Charles.

FACTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from factious.] Inclination to publick dissension; violent clamorousness for a party.

FACTITIOUS. adj. [factitious, Latin.] Made by art, in opposition to what is made by nature.

In the making and distilling of soap, by one degree of fire the salt, the water, and the oil or grease, whereof that factitious concrete is made up, being boiled up together, are easily brought to incorporate.

Hardness wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant all other stones, being exalted to that degree that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it; the factitious stones of chymists, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist.

Ray on the Creation.

FACTOR. n. f. [facteur, French; factor, Latin.]

1. An agent for another; one who transacts business for another. Commonly a substitute in mercantile affairs.

Take on you the charge

And kingly government of this your land;

Not as protector, steward, substitute,

Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shakef. Richard III.

Percey is but my factor, good my lord,

'Tis engross up glorious deeds on my behalf. Shak. Hen. IV.

You all three,

The senators alone of this great world,

Chief factors for the gods. Shakef. Anthony and Cleopatra.

We agreed that I should send up an English factor, that whatsoever the island could yield should be delivered at a reasonable rate.

Raleigh's Apology.

It was conceived that the Scots had good intelligence, having some factors doubtless at this mart, albeit they did not openly trade.

Hayward.

Vile arts and restless endeavours are used by some fly and venomous factors for the old republican cause. South's Sermons.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged, by the chief factors for a general intromission of all forts, sects and persuasions, into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules and orders of our church, and that therefore they ought to be taken away.

Fore'd into exile from his rightful throne,

He made all countries where he came his own;

And viewing monarchs secret arts of sway,

A royal factor for their kingdoms lay. Dryden.

2. [In arithmetic.] The multiplicator and multiplicand. Harris.

FACTORY. n. f. [from factor.]

1. A house or district inhabited by traders in a distant country.

2. The traders embodied in one place.

FACTOTUM. n. f. [factotum, Latin.] It is used likewise in burlesque French. A servant employed alike in all kinds of business: as Scrub in the Stratagem.

FACTURE. n. f. [French.] The act or manner of making any thing.

FACTULTY. n. f. [facultis, French; facultas, Latin.]

1. The power of doing any thing; ability whether corporal or intellectual.

There is no kind of faculty or power in man, or any creature, which can rightly perform the functions allotted to it without perpetual aid and concurrence of that supreme cause of all things.

Hooker, b. i. f. 8.

Orators may grieve; for in their sides,

Rather than heads, their faculty abides. Denham.

Reason in man supplies the defect of other faculties wherein we are inferior to beasts, and what we cannot compass by force we bring about by stratagem. L'Estrange.

2. Powers of the mind, imagination, reason, memory.

For well I understand in the prime end

Of nature, her the inferior; in the mind

F A I

5. To be naturally not durable; to be transient; easily to lose vigour or beauty.
The glorious beauty on the head of the fat valley shall be a fading flower. Jf. xxviii. 4.
The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.
Narcissus' change, to the vain virgin shows
Who trusts to beauty, trusts the fading role. Gay's Fan.
To FADE. v. a. To wear away; to reduce to languor; to deprive of freshness or vigour; to wither.
This is a man old, wrinkled, faded, withered;
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shakespeare.
His palms, though under weights they did not stand, Still thriv'd; no Winter could his laurels fade. Dryden.
Reflex anxiety, forlorn despair,
And all the faded family of care. Garth's Discons.
To FADGE. v. n. [Gegagen, Saxon; fagen, German.]
1. To fuit; to fit; to have one part consistent with another.
How will this fadge? my master loves her dearly,
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shakespeare.
2. To agree; not to quarrel; to live in amity.
When they thriv'd they never fadg'd,
But only by the cars engag'd;
Like dogs that snarl about a bone,
And play together when they've none. Hudibras, p. iii.
3. To succeed; to hit.
The fox had a fetch; and when he saw it would not fadge, away goes he presently. L'Estrange's Fables.
4. This is a mean word now used, unless perhaps in ludicrous and low compositions.
FAGGERS. n. f. [Latin.] Excrements; but often used to express the ingredients and feelings after distillation and infusion. Quincy.
To FAG. v. a. [fago, Latin.] To grow weary; to faint with weariness.

FAGOT. n. f. [fagot, Welsh and Armorick; fagot, French.]
1. A bundle of sticks bound together for the fire.
About the pile of fagots, sticks and hay,
The bellows raised the newly kindled flame. Fairfax, b. ii.
Spare for no fagots, let there be enow;
Place pitchy barrels on the fatal stake. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Mitres or fagots have been the rewards of different persons, according as they pronounced these consecrated syllables or not. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
2. A bundle of sticks for any purpose.
The black prince filled a ditch with fagots as successfully as the generals of our times do it with falcones. Addis. Spectator.
3. A soldier numbered in the muster-roll, but not really existing.
To FAGGOT. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie up; to bundle together.
He was too warm on picking work to dwell,
But faggot his notions as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled, all was well. Dryden.
To FAILE. v. n. [failler, French; faeln, Welsh. Pezron.]
1. To be deficient; to cease from former plenty; to fall short; not to be equal to demand or use.
The waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up. Job xiv. 11.
Where the credit and money fail, barter alone must do. Locke.
2. To be extinct; to cease to be produced.
Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men.
Let there not fail from the house of Joab one that hath an issue. 2 Sa. iii. 29.
3. To cease; to perish; to be lost.
For Titan, by the mighty loss dismay'd,
Among the heavens th' immortal fact display'd,
Left the remembrance of his grief should fail. Addison.
4. To die; to lose life.
Had the king in his last sickness fail'd,
Their heads should have gone off. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
Both he that helpeth shall fall, and he that is holpen shall fall down, and they all shall fail together. Jf. xxxi. 3.
5. To sink; to be torn down; to languish through resistance.
Neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit should fail before me. Jf. lvii. 16.

F A I

6. To decay; to decline; to languish.
Mine eyes fail. Pj. cxix. 8.
I perceive
Thy mortal fight to fail: objects divine Must needs impair and weary human sense. Milt. Par. Lost.
7. To mis; not to produce its effect.
Consider of deformity not as a sign which is deceivable, but as a cause which seldom fails of the effect. Bacon's Essays.
This jest was first of th' other house's making. Dryden.
And, five times try'd, has never fail'd of taking.
A persuasion that we shall overcome any difficulties, that we meet with in the sciences, seldom fails to carry us through them. Locke.
He does not remember whether every grain came up or not; but he thinks that very few failed. Mortimer's Husband.
8. To mis; not to succeed in a design.
I am enjoin'd, by oath, if I fail
Of the right casket, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.
In difficulties of state, the true reason of failing proceeds from failings in the administration. L'Estrange.
Men who have been buied in the pursuit of the philosopher's stone, have failed in their design. Addison's Guardian.
9. To be deficient in duty.

To FAIL. v. a.
1. To desert; not to continue to assist or supply.
The ship was now left alone, as proud lords be when fortune fails them. Sidney, b. ii.
So hast thou oft with guile thine honour blent;
But little may such guile thee now avail.
If wond'ring force and fortune do not much me fail. Fai. 2u.
There shall be signs in the sun, the moon, and the stars, mens hearts failing them for fear. Lu. xxi. 25.
Her heart failed her, and she would fail have compounded for her life. L'Estrange.
He presumes upon his parts that they will not fail him at time of need, and so thinks it superfluous labour to make any provision beforehand. Locke.
2. Not to assist; to neglect; to omit to help.
Since nature fails us in no needful thing,
Why want I means my inward self to see? Davies.
3. To omit; not to perform.
The inventive god who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart. Dryden.
4. To be wanting to.
There shall not fail thee a man on the throne. 1 Kings ii. 4.
FAIL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Misfortune; mis; unsuccessfulness.
2. Omission; non-performance.
Mark and perform it, feast thou? for the fail
Of any point in't shall not only be Death to thyself, but to thy lewd-tongu'd wife. Shakespeare.
He will without fail drive out from before you the Cannanites. Job iii. 10.

- 3. His corn, his cattle, were his only care,
And his supreme delight a country fair. Dryden.
The ancient Nundine, or fairs of Rome, were kept every ninth day: afterwards the same privileges were granted to the country markets, which were at first under the power of the consuls. Arbutnot on Coins.
- FAIRING, n. f.* [from fair.] A present given at a fair.
Sweetheart, we shall be rich ere we depart,
If fairings come thus plentifully in. Shakesp. Lear's Lab. Lost.
What pretty things they are, we wonder at!
Like children that esteem every trifle,
And prefer a fairing before their fathers:
What difference is between us and them?
That we are dearer fools, cockcombs at A higher rate. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.
Now he goes on, and sings of fairs and shows;
For still new fairs before his eyes arose:
How pedlars stalls with glittering toys are laid,
The various fairings of the country maid. Gay's Pastoral's.
- FAIRLY, adv.* [from fair.]
1. Beautifully: as, a city fairly situated.

haps rather confidently; steadily.
If his occasions were not virtuous,
I should not urge it half so faithfully. Shakesp. Timon.
- FA'ITHFULNESS, n. f.* [from faithful.]
1. Honesty; veracity.
For there is no faithfulness in your mouth; your inward part is very wickedness. Pf. lix.
The band that knits together and supports all compacts, is truth and faithfulness. South's Sermons.
2. Adherence to duty; loyalty.
The same zeal and faithfulness continues in your blood, which animated one of your noble ancestors to sacrifice his life in the quarrel of his sovereign. Dryden.
- FA'ITHLESS, adj.* [from faith.]
1. Without belief in the revealed truths of religion; uncon-verted.
Whatever our hearts be to God and to his truth, believe we, or be we as yet faithless, for our conversion or confirmation, the force of natural reason is great. Hooker, b. iii. f. 8.
Never dare misfortune cross her foot,
Unless the doth it under this excuse,
That she is issue to a faithless Jew. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.
2. Perfidious; disloyal; not true to duty, profession, promise, or allegiance.
Both
Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most;
A most unnatural and faithless service. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

I will begin to pray for myself and for them; for I see the falls of us that dwell in the land. 2 Esdr. viii. 17.
5. Ruin; dissolution.
Paul's, the late theme of such a muse, whose sight
Has bravely reach'd and soar'd above thy height;
Now that thou stand, though sword, or time, or fire,
Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall conspire. Danham.
6. Downfall; loss of greatness; declension from eminence; degradation; state of being deposted from a high station; plunge from happiness or greatness into misery or meanness.
Her memory served as an accuser of her change, and her own handwriting was there to bear testimony against her fall. Sidney, b. ii.
Perhaps thou talk'st of me, and do'st enquire
Of my restraint; why here I live alone;
And pitiest this my miserable fall. Daniel's Civil War.
He, careless now of interest, fame, or fate,
Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great;
Or deeming meanest what we greatest call,
Beholds thee glorious only in thy fall. Pope to Parnell.
7. Declension of greatness, power, or dominion.
'Till the empire came to be settled in Charles the Great, the fall of the Romans huge dominion concurring with other universal evils, caused those times to be days of much affliction and trouble throughout the world. Hooker, b. v. c. 41.
8. Diminution; decrease of price.
That the improvement of Ireland is the principal cause why our lands in purchase rise not, as naturally they should, with the fall of our interest, appears evidently from the effect the fall of interest hath had upon houses in London. Child.
9. Declension or diminution of sound; cadence; close of music.
That strain again; it had a dying fall:
O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet south
That breathes upon a bank of violets, Stealing and giving odours. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
How sweetly did they float upon the wings
Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night;
At ev'ry fall smoothing the raven down
Of darkness till it smil'd! Milton.
10. Declivity; steep descent.
Waters when beat upon the shore, or straitened, as the falls of bridges, or dashed against themselves by winds, give a roaring noise. Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 115.
11. Cataract; cascade; rush of water down a steep place.
There will we fit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks
By shallow rivers, to whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals. Shakespeare's
A whistling wind, or a melodious noise of birds among the spreading branches, or a pleasing fall of water running violently, these things made them to swoon for fear. Wyd. xvii.
Down through the crannies of the living walls
The crystal streams descend in murmur falls. Dryden's Virg.
The swain, in barren deserts, with surprize
Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise;
And starts, amidst the thrifty wilds, to hear
New falls of water murmur in his ear. Pope's Messiah.
Now under hanging mountains,
Beside the falls of fountains,
He makes his moan;
And calls her ghost,
For ever, ever, ever lost! Pope's St. Cecilia.

What crowds of patients the town-doctor kills,
Or how last fall he rais'd the weekly bills. Dryden's Juven.
Any thing that falls in great quantities.
Upon a great fall of rain the current carried away a huge heap of apples. L'Estrange.
14. The act of felling or cutting down: as, the fall of timber.
- FALLACIOUS, adj. [fallax, Latin; fallacious, French.]

F A L

1. Producing mistake; sophistical. It is never used of men, but of writings, propositions, or things.
They believed and assented to things neither evident nor certain, nor yet so much as probable, but actually false and fallacious; such as were the absurd doctrines and stories of their rabbies. Southey's Sermons.
2. Deceitful; mocking expectation.
Soon as the force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapour bland
About their spirits had play'd, and inmost powers
Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
False philosophy inspires Fallacious hope. Milton.
- FALLACIOUSLY, adv. [from fallacious.] Sophistically; with purpose to deceive; with unfound reasoning
We shall so far encourage contradiction, as to promise not to oppose any pen that shall fallaciously refute us. Brown.
We have seen how fallaciously the author has stated the cause, by supposing that nothing but unlimited mercy, or unlimited punishment, are the methods that can be made use of. Addison's
- FALLACIOUSNESS, n. f. [from fallacious.] Tendency to deceive; inconclusiveness.
FALLACY, n. f. [fallacia, Latin; fallace, French.] Sophism; logical artifice; deceit; deceitful argument; delusory mode of ratiocination.
Most princes make themselves another thing from the people by a fallacy of argument; thinking themselves most kings when the subject is most basely subjected. Sidney, b. ii.
Until I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the favour'd fallacy. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.
It were a mere fallacy, and mistaking to ascribe that to the force of imagination upon another body, which is but the force of imagination upon the proper body. Bacon's Na. Hist.
All men, who can see an inch before them, may easily detect gross fallacies. Dryden.
- FALLIBILITY, n. f. [from fallible.] Liability to be deceived; uncertainty; possibility of error.
There is a great deal of fallibility in the testimony of men; yet there are some things we may be almost as certain of as that the sun shines, or that five twenties make an hundred. Watts's Logic.
- FALLIBLE, adj. [fal's, Latin.] Liable to error; such as may be deceived.
Do not falsify your resolution with hopes that are fallible: to-morrow you must die. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
He that creates to himself thousands of little hopes, uncertain in the promise, fallible in the event, and depending upon a thousand circumstances, shall often fail in his expectations. Taylor's Rule of living boys.
- Our intellectual or rational powers need some assistance, because they are so frail and fallible in the present state. Watts.
- FALLING, n. f. [from fall.] Indentings opposed to prominence.
It shows the nose and eyebrows, with the several prominences and fallings in of the features, much more distinctly than any other kind of figure. Addison on ancient Medals.
- FALLINGSICKNESS, n. f. [fall and sickness.] The epilepsy; a disease in which the patient is without any warning deprived at once of his senses, and falls down.
Did Caesar swoon?—He fell down in the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless—He hath the falling-sickness. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.
- The dogfisher is good against the falling-sickness. Walton.
- FALLOW, adj. [falpe, Saxon.]
1. Pale red, or pale yellow.
How does your fallow greyhound, sir?
I heard say, he was out-run at Cotsale. Shakespeare's
The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, had a great desire to make a great park for red as well as fallow deer between Richmond and Hampton-court. Clarendon.
2. Unfowed; left to rest after the years of tillage. [Supposed to be so called from the colour of naked ground.]
The ridges of the fallow field lay traversed, so as the English must cross them in presenting the charge. Hayward.
3. Plowed; but not fowed; plowed as prepared for a second aration.
Her predecessors, in their course of government, did but sometimes cast up the ground; and so leaving it fallow, it became quickly overgrown with weeds. Hawel's Vocal Forrest.
4. Unplowed; uncultivated.
Her fallow lets
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon. Shakespeare's Henry V.
5. Unoccupied; neglected.
Shall saints in civil bloodshed wallow
Of faints, and let the cause lie fallow. Hudibras, p. i. c. 2.
- FALLOW, n. f. [from the adjective.]

FA'LSHEHOOD. n.f. [from falsh.]
1. Want of truth; want of veracity.
All deception in the course of life is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falshhood passing from lies to things. South's Sermons.
2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceitfulness; perfidy.
3. A lie; a false assertion.
FA'LSHELY. adv. [from falsh.]
1. Contrary to truth; not truly.
Simeon and Levi spake not only falshly but infidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing prophecies and religion. Gov. of Tongue.
Already were the Belgians on our coast,
Whole feet more mighty every day became
By late success, which they did falshly boast,
And now by first appearing 'em'd to claim. Dryd. Am. Mir.
Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,
And yet he falshly said he was in love;
Falshly, for had he truly lov'd, at least
He would have giv'n one day to my request. Dryd. Aureng.
Such as are treated ill, and upbraided falshly, find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and endeavour to soothe their secret repentments. Addison's Spectator.
2. Erroneously; by mistake.
He knows that to be inconvenient which we falshly think convenient for us. Smalbridge's Sermons.
3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.
FA'LSHNESS. n.f. [from falsh.]
1. Contrariety to truth.
2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.
Suppose the reverie of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falshness to a man's world, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature? Tillotson, Sermon 3.
3. Duplicity; deceit; double dealing.
Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all falshness or foulness of intentions, especially to perfonated devotion. Faunnd's Fundamentals.
4. Treachery; perfidy; traitoroufness.
King Richard might create a perfect guess,
That great Northumberland, then falsh to him,
Would of that feel grow to a greater falshness. Shak. H. IV.
The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the falshness, or cheated by the avarice of such a fervant. Rogers.
FA'LSER. n.f. [from falsh.] A deceiver; an hypocrite. Now obsolete.
Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be
Of craft coloured with simplicity;
And such end, pardie, does all them remain,
That of such falshers friendship been fain. Spenser's Pastoral.
FA'LSIFY'ABLE. adv. [from falshfy.] Liable to be counterfeited or corrupted.
FA'LSIFICATION. n.f. [falshfication, French, from falshfy.]
1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.
Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falshification of the words, wittingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify Divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily countenanced. Hooker, b. liii. §. 5.
To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falshifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits divine honour. Bacon.
2. Confutation.
The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this life, and to preserve his story from detection of falshification. Notes on the Odyssey.
FA'LSIFYER. n.f. [from falshfy.]
1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.
It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falshifiers of coin; for counterfeited money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs. Boyle.
2. A liar; one that contrives falshhoods.
Boasters are naturally falshifiers, and the people, of all others that put their flams the worst together. L'Estrange's Fables.
FA'LSIFY. v.a. [falshfy, French.]
1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for the which in reality it is not.
We cannot excuse that church, which either through corrupt translations of Scriptures, delivered, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falshified additions, propoeth that to the people of God as Scripture which is in truth no Scripture. Hooker, b. vi. §. 11.
The Irish bards use to forge and falshfy every thing as the lift, to please or displease any man. Spenser on Parn.

F A M

2. To confute; to prove false.
Our Saviour's prophetic flands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish economy, when Jews and Pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction. Addison.

3. To violate; to break by falshood.
It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to thum, to make him live to fec thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled. Sidney, b. ii.

He fuddenly falsified his faith, and villainoufly feld Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself, miftrufting nothing fells than the falshood of the pyrate. Knollys's History of the Turks.

This fupernadrs treachery to all the other pefilent ingredients of the crime; tis falsifying the moft important truil. Decay of Piety.

4. To pierce; to run through.
His crell is rai'd away, his ample fhield
Is falsify'd, and round with jav'ins fill'd. Dryden's Aeneid.
Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus. My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language.
The fact is confefsed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But fuppoie it be not there: why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polifhed language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si græca fonte cadant, efpe-cially when other words are joined with them which explain the fenfe. I ufe the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the fhield of Turnus was not of proof againft the fpears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain.

Ma fi l'Udradeo d'Anhi era perfetto,
Che non poter faltarlo in nefium canto. Ariotto, cant. xxvi.
Fallor cannot otherwife be turned than by falsified; for his fhield was falsified, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with faying his fhield was pierced, and bored, and ftruck with javelins. Dryden.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalize the new fignification, which I have never feen copied, except once by fome obfcure namelefs writer, and which indeed deferves not to be received.

5. To lye; to lie; to tell lies; to violate truth.
This point we have gained, that it is abfolutely and uni-verfally unlawful to lie and falsify. South's Sermons.

6. To lye; to lie; to tell lies; to violate truth.
FALTY, v. n. f. lya, falsh, Latin. South's Sermons.

FALshood; contrariety to truth.
Neither are they able to break through thofe errors, whereto they are fo determinately fetled, that they pay upon falfity the whole film of whatever love is owing unto God's truth. Hosker, b. v. f. 49.

Can you on him fuch falfities obtrude?
And as a mortal the moft wife delude? Sandys's Paraphrafe.
Probability does not properly make any alteration, either in the truth or falfity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearnefs or appearance to the underftanding.

South's Sermons.

2. A lye; an error; a falfe allection or poition.
That Danubius rifeth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the North, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the reftorer of Epicurus, and all eafily confutable. Glawe. Seep. c. 20.

TO FALTY, v. n. [falter, to be wanting, Spanifh; caultur, a flammer, Hlandick, which is probably a word from the fame radical.]

1. To heitate in the utterance of words.
With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,
Tell on, quoth the Fairy Queen, b. i.
The pale afflictons on each other ftard,
With gaping mouths for iffuing words prepar'd;
The fill-born founds upon the palate hang;
And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue. Dryden.
He changes, gods! and falters at the queftion:
His fears, his words, his looks declare him guilty. Smith.

2. To fail in any act of the body.
This earth fhall have a feeling; and thefe ftones
Prove armed foldiers, ere her native king Shall *fa*ter under foul rebellious arms. Shakef. Richard II.

3. To fail in any act of the underftanding.
How far idiots are concerned in the want or weaknefs of any, or all faculties, an exact obfervation of their feveral ways of faltering would difcover. Locke.

TO FALTY, v. a. To fit; to cleanse. This word feems to be merely rufhick, or provincial.
Barley for malt mud be bold, dry, fweet, and clean faltered from foulnefs, feeds and oats. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FALTERINGLY, adv. [falter, v.] With hefitation; with difficulty; with feeblinefs.

TO FAMBLE, v. a. [fammer, Danish.] To heitate in the fpeech. This word I find only in Skinner.

so much, that he wears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Shak.

3. Unceremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted.
Kalandar streight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar fort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken. Sidney.

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.
I fee not how the Scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

Let us chuse such limbs of noble counsel,
That the great body of our state may go
In equal rank with the best governed nation;
That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Our sweet
Recess, and only consolation left Familiar to our eyes? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Of tena which is familiar to the mind, connected with other things which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance. Wat's Improvement of the Mind.

5. Well acquainted with; accustomed; habituated by custom.
Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd
In temper and in nature, will receive Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain. Milton's P. Lost.
The fences at first let in particular ideas; and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and names got to them. Locke.

He was amazed how so impotent and groveling an insect as I could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and defolation. Gulliver's Travels.

Patient permit the sadly-pleasing strain;
Familiar now with grief, your tears refrain. Pope's Odyssey.

6. Common; frequent.
To a wrong hypothesis, may be reduced the errors that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood: there is nothing more familiar than this. Locke.

7. Easy; unconstrained.
He uncrins
His mule, and sports in loose familiar strains: Addison.

8. Too nearly acquainted.
A poor man found a priest familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad, and could not prove it, the priest fued him for defamation. Camden.

FAM'ILIAR. n. f.

England ne'er lost a king of so much worth. Shak. Hen. VI.
There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown.
She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her.
Pyreus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things; as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, and swine tumbling in the mire; whereupon he was firnamed Rupographus. Peacham on Drawing.

FAN

I shall be nam'd among the famously
Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton's Agonistes.
Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Waller own, that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bulloign, which was turned into English by Mr. Fairfax.

Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

It has sometimes a middle signification, and imports fame whether for good or ill.

Meneceates and Menas, famous pyrates,
Make the sea serve them. Shakel. Anthony and Cleopatra.

FAMOUSLY. adv. [from famous.] With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was famously enriched
With pollick grave counsel; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace. Shakel. Rich. III.

They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of, and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read. Grew's Conf.

FAMOUSNESS. n. f. [from famous.] Celebrity; great fame.

FAN. n. f. [fanus, Latin.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.
- With scarfs, and fans, and double change of brav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knavery. Shakel.
Flavia, the least and slightest toy
Can with restitutes art employ:
In other hands the fan would prove
An engine of small force in love;
But she, with such an air and mien,
Not to be told or safely seen,
Directs its wanton motions so,
That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;
Gives coolness to the matchless dame,
'T' every other breath a flame. Atterbury.

The modest fan was lifted up no more,
And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before. Pope.

Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to show him such a fan of feathers.

The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed. [Fan, French.]

Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,
Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shak. Trail and Cr.

For the cleaning of corn is commonly used either a wicker-fan, or a fan with fails. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Any thing by which the air is moved; wings.

The pris'ner with a spring from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

Any instrument to raise the fire.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own counsels: the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that love. Hooker.

TO FAN. v. a.

1. To cool or recreate with a fan.

She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves. Spectator.

To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.

Let every feeble humour shake your hearts;
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,
Fan you into despair. Shakel. Coriolanus.

The Norwegian banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakel. Macbeth.

The air
Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:
From branch to branch the smaller birds with song
Solac'd the woods, and spread their painted wings,
'Till ev'n.
The fanning wind upon her bosom blows;
To meet the fanning wind the bosom role:
The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose. Dryden's Cymon and Iphigenia.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,
And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves. Dryden.

And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair. Pope.

To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Not to be wicked; but as chaff, which, fann'd,
The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand
In judgment. Milton.

FANATICISM. n. f. [from fanatic.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the Scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their slanders and calumnies. Roger's Sermons.

FANATIC. adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatique, Fr.] Enthusiastic; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

After these appear'd
A crew, who, under names of old renown,
Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and forceries abus'd Fanatic Egypt, and her priests, to seek

FANATIC. n. f. [from the adjective.] An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine than the tumultuary weapon snatched up by a fanatic. Decay of Pitty.

FANCIFUL. adj. [fancy and full.]

Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason.

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented. Woodward's Natural History.

Directed by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings?
and how foolish and fanciful were they? Hayward.

It would show as much singularity to deny this, as it does a fanciful facility to affirm it. Garth's Preface to Ovid.

FANCIFULLY. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

FANCIFULNESS. n. f. [from fanciful.] Addition to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FANCY. n. f. [contracted from phantasy, phantasia, Latin; phantasia, Greek.]

Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Shakespeare, fancy's sweetest child!
In the soul
Are many lesser faculties, that serve Reason as chief: among these fancy next
Her office holds; of all external things,
Which the five watchful senses represent,
She forms imaginations, airy shapes,
Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames
All what we affirm, or what deny, and call
Our knowledge, or opinion. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence, which gives as full satisfaction and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,
From hope to fear, from joy to doubt:
Whom we now a goddess call,
Divinity grac'd in every feature,
Strait's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature;
Love and hate are fancy all. Granville.

An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Mens private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon, b. viii.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Addison on Italy.

Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died
With them they think on? Shakel. Macbeth.

Inclination; liking; fondness.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourish'd?
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. Shakel. Merchant of Venice.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling.

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself,
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
To death, or to a vow of single life.

A resemblance in humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is oftentimes a ground of affection. Callier of Friendship.

Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall gain me, that it may be said
Desert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

FAN

Frollick; idle scheme; vagary.

One that was just entering upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. L'Estrange.

Something that pleases or entertains.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatical, or medicinal substance, are but fancies: the cause is, for that those things have passed their period, and nourish not. Bacon's Nat. History.

London-pride is a pretty fancy, and does well for borders. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO FANCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies. Spratt's Sermons.

If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with. Locke.

TO FANCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;
Who mighty thought can clothe with manly drefs,
He whom I fancy, but can ne'er express. Dryd. Juven. Sat.

To like; to be pleased with.

Ninus both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband. Raleigh's History of the World.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this town in whatever manner she pleases to fancy. Swift.

FANCYMO'NGER. n. f. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him. Shakel. As you like it.

FANCYSICK. adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unfound; one whose distemper is in his own mind.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable; and when we come once to be fancysick, there's no cure for it. L'Estrange.

FANE. n. f. [fane, French; fanum, Latin.] A temple; a place consecrated to religion.

Nor fane, nor capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarments all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege. Shakel. Coriolanus.

Old Calibe, who kept the sacred fane
Of Juno, now the seem'd. Dryden's En, b. vii. l. 589.

Yet some to fanes repair'd, and humble rites
Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fabled gods,
Who with their vot'ries in one ruin shad'd. Phillips.

A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,
Hewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb. Tickell.

The fields are ravish'd from th' industrious swains,
From men their cities, and from gods their fanes. Pope.

1. A bully; a Hector.

2. A bluffer; a boaster of more than he can perform.

There are fanfarons in the trials of wit too, as well as in feats of arms; and none so forward to engage in argument or discourse as those that are least able to go through with it. L'Estr.

Virgil makes Aeneas a bold avower of his own virtues, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a fanfaron or Hector. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

FANFARONADE. n. f. [from fanfaron, French.] A bluffer; a tumour of fictitious dignity.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfaronade of monsieur Boufflers, when the earl of Portland and that general had an interview. Swift.

TO FANG. v. a. [fangan, Saxon; vangen, Dutch.] To seize; to gripe; to clutch.

Deftruction fang mankind!
FANG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal; any thing like 'em:

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n till I shrink with cold, I smile and say
This is no flattery. Shakel. As you like it.

Some

FAN

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs, or tusks; as boars, pikes, falcons, and dogs, though less.

Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 752.

Prepared to fly.

The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk, unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain.

Dryden's Ovid, b. viii.

Then charge him close, provoke him to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, swooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground.

Addison's Cato.

2. The nails; the talons.
3. Any shoot or other thing by which hold is taken.
The protuberant fangs of the yuca are to be treated like the tuberoses.

Boslyn's Kalender.

FAN'GED. adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two schoolfellows,

Whom I will trust as I will address fang'd,
They bear the mandate.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Not Scythians, nor fierce Dacians, onward rush
With half the speed, nor half so swift retreat:
In chariots, fang'd with scythes, they scour the field,
Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,
And fire a dreadful harvest on the plain.

Phillips's Britain.

FANGLE. n. s. [from fangen, Saxon, to attempt. Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme. It is never used, or rarely, but in contempt with the epithet new; as, new fangles, new fangleness.

FAN'GLED. adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gaudy; ridiculously showy; vainly decorated. This is still retained in Scotland: as, he's new fangled, or whimsical, and very fond of novelty.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in purpose un-constant.

Afchan.

A book! oh, rare one!
Be not, as in this fangled world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

FAN'GLESS. adj. [from fang.] Toothless; without teeth.
The king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his power, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold.

Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

FAN'GOT. n. s. [] A quantity of wares: as raw silk, &c. containing from one or two hundred weight three quarters.

Diet.

I found the people strangely fantasied.

Shakespeare's King John.

FANTA'SM. n. s. [See PHANTASM.]
FANTA'STICAL. adj. [from fantasy.] Filled with fancies or wild imaginations.

1. Irrational; bred only in the imagination.
The delight that a man takes from another's sin, can be nothing else but a fantastical, preternatural complacency, arising from that which he really has no feeling of.

South.

2. Substituting only in the fancy; imaginary.
Present seats
Are less than horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes to my single state of man, that function
Is inother'd in fumes; and nothing is,
But what is not.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Men are so possessed with their own fancies, that they take them for oracles; and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations of truth; when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastick ideas of a busy imagination.

Decay of Piety.

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms which only assume visible forms occasionally.
Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye shew?

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

4. Capricious; humorous; unsteady; irregular.
Nor happiness can I, nor misery feel,
From any turn of her fantastick wheel.

Prior.

5. Whimsical; fanciful; indulgent to one's own imagination.
They put such words in the mouths of one of these fantastical mind-infected people, that children and musicians call lovers.

Sidney.

I'll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd conceited true love knots:
To be fantastick, may become a youth
Of greater time than I.

Shakespeare's Two Gentlemen of Verona.

Duvmir is provided with an imperious, expensive and fan-

FAN

fantick mistress; to whom he retires from the conversation of a discreet and affectionate wife.

Taylor.

We are apt to think your medallists a little fantastical in the different prices they set upon their coins, without any regard to the metal of which they are composed.

Addison.

FANTA'STICALY. adj. [from fantastical.]
1. By the power of imagination.
2. Capriciously; humorously; unsteadily.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

3. Whimsically; in compliance with mere imagination.
One cannot so much as fantastically chuse, even or odd, he thinks not why.

Grew's Cosmology, b. ii. c. 4.

FANTA'STICALNESS. n. s. [from fantastical.]
FANTA'STICKNESS. n. s. [from fantastical.]
1. Humorousness; mere compliance with fancy.
2. Whimsicalness; unreasonableness.

Tillotson's Preface.

3. Caprice; unsteadiness.
FAN TASY. n. s. [fantasia, Fr. phantasia, Latin; φαντασία, Gr.]

1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagining. See FANCY.
How now, Horatio? you tremble and look pale!

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Is not this something more than fantasy?
I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which is as thin of substance as the air,
And more inconsistent than the wind.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Go you, and where you find a maid,
That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy;
Sleep she as found as careless infancy.

Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,
Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;
And so they send a good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell.

Davies.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, or a mad man sees things before him which are not there.

Newton.

2. Idea; image of the mind.
And with the fugitive sweet thereof allure,
Chaste ladies ears to fantasies impure.

Hubbard's Tale.

Humour; inclination.
I would wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the Scriptures to your fantasies and affections.

Whit.

FAN'TOM. n. s. [See PHANTOM.]
FAP. adj. Fuddled; drunk. It seems to have been a cant word in the time of Shakespeare.

The gentleman had drunk himself out of his five senses; and being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashiered.

Shakespeare's Far.

FAR. adv. [Saxon; fari, Fr.]
1. To great extent in length.
Pay sacred reverence to Apollo's fong,
Left wrathful the far-shooting god emit
His fatal arrows.

Prior.

2. To a great extent every way. This less proper:
Is what I love: the far extended ocean
To a little riv'let I prefer.

Prior.

With costly cates the stain'd her frugal board;
Then with ill-gotten gold she bought a lord:
Corruption, discord, luxury combin'd,
Down sunk the far fam'd mistress of mankind.

Arbutnot.

3. To a great distance progressively.
The far fam'd brother of the enchantress dame.

Pope.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Is it far you ride?
—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Far from that hated face the Trojans fly;
All but the fool who fought his destiny.

Dryden's Æn.

4. Remotely; at a great distance.
He meant to travel into far countries, until his friends affection either ceased or prevailed.

Sidney.

In a kingdom rightly ordered, after a law is once published, it presently takes effect far and wide; all states framing themselves thereunto.

Hooker, b. i. f. 3.

And after that long strayed here and there,
Through every field and forest far and near.

Hubb. Tale.

Far be it from me to justify the cruelties which were at first used towards them, which had their reward soon after.

Bacon's Holy War.

He sent light horsemen into Mesopotamia with a guide, because

FAR

cause the country was unto him best known; following not far after himself with all his army.

Knelles's Hist. of the Turks.

And yet the lights which in my tower do shine,
Mine eyes, which view all objects high and far,
Look not into this little world of mine.

Davies.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wand'ring thoughts, and notions vain.

Milt.

I have been hunting up and down, far and near, since your unhappy indisposition, to find out a remedy.

L'Estrange.

The nations far and near contend in choice,
And send the flow'r of war by public voice.
The painted lizard and the birds of prey,
Foes of the frugal kind, be far away.

Dryden.

But from the reading of my book and me,
Who fortune's fault upon the poor can throw,
Point at the tatter'd coat and ragged shoe.

Dryden's Pers.

Far off you view'd them with a longing eye
Upon the topmost branch.

Dryden.

These words are so far from establishing any dominion, that we find the quite contrary.

Locke.

'Till on the Po his blasted corps was hurl'd,
Far from his country, in the western world.

Addison's Ovid.

5. To a distance.
As far as the East is from the West, so far hath he removed our transgressions from him.

Pf. ciii. 12.

In ancient times, doth differ far
From what our fiery battles are.

Waller.

Of negatives we have far the least certainty, and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved.

Tillotson.

Latin is a more fucine language than either the Italian, Spanish, French, or even than the English, which, by reason of its monosyllables, is far the most compendious of them.

Dryden.

Besides, he's lovely far above the rest,
With you immortal, and with beauty blest.

Pope.

Ah! hope not yet to breathe thy native air;
Far other journey first demands thy care.

Pope's Odyssey.

8. To a great height; magnificently. This is perhaps only in Shakespeare.

I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.
—You speak him far.
—I don't extend him, sir.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

9. To a certain point; to a certain degree.
The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen; but must be received from God himself.

Hooker, b. i.

How far forth you do like their articles. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Not to resolve, is to resolve; and many times it breeds as many necessities, and engageth as far in some other sort, as to resolve.

In all their politic farfetches;
And from their Coptic priest, Kircherus,
Found out this mystick way to jeez us.

Hudibras, p. iii.

FAR

FAR-FETCHED. adj. [far and fetch.]

1. Brought from places remote.
Of these things others quickly will dispose,
Whole pains have earn'd the farfetch'd spoil.

Milt. Pa. Left.

By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought where southern stars arise:
We trac'd the farfetch'd gold unto the mine,
And that which brid'd our fathers made our prize.

Dryden.

2. Studiously fought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.
York, with all his farfetch'd policy.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

For farfetch'd rhymes make puzzled angels strain,
And in low prose dull Lucifer complain.

Smith.

Under this head we may rank those words, which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable farfetch'd analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half roasted.

Watts's Logick.

FAR-PIERCING. adj. [far and pierce.] Striking, or penetrating a great way.
Atlas, her fire, to whole farpiercing eye
The wonders of the deep expanded lie;
Th' eternal columns which on earth he rears,
End in the starry vault, and prop the spheres.

Pope's Odys.

FAR-SHOOTING. adj. [far and shoot.] Shooting to a great distance.
Then loud he call'd Æneas thrice by name;
The loud repeated voice to glad Æneas came;
Great Jove, he said, and the farshooting god,
Inspire thy mind to make thy challenge good.

Dryd. Æn.

FAR. adv.

Call forth the tender grass and budding flow'r,
Then, at the last, produce in open air
Both flocks, and send them to their Summer's fare. Dryden.
This is what nature's want may well suffice;
That would more is covetous, not wife:
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryd. Juv.
Upon his rising up he ordered the peasant to set before him whatever food he had in his house: the peasant brought out a great deal of coarse fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily. Addison's Guardian, No. 99.
- FAREWELL. adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb fare well, or fare you well; sis felix, abi in bonam rem; or vene sit tibi; but in time use familiarized it to an adverb, and it is used both by those who go and those who are left.]
- The parting compliment; adieu.
But farewell, king; fish thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here. Shak. K. Lear.

FAR

- Farewell*, master Silence: 'I will not use many words with you; fare you well, gentlemen, both. Shaksp. Henry IV.

And others doth offend when 'tis let loose. Suckling.
- TO FART. v. a. [from the noun.] To break wind behind.
As when we a gun discharge,
Although the bore be not so large,
Before the flame from muzzle bursts,
Just at the breech it flashes first;
So from my lord his passion broke,
He farted first, and then he spoke. Swift.
- FA'RTHER. adv. [This word is now generally considered as the comparative degree of far; but by no analoger can far make farther or farthest: it is therefore probable, that the ancient orthography was nearer the true, and that we ought to write farther and farthest, from farth, farther, farthest, pon-sop, farth, Saxon; the o and u, by resemblance of sound, being first confounded in speech, and afterwards in books.]
At a greater distance; to a greater distance; more remotely;
beyond; moreover.
- To make a perfect judgment of good pictures, when compared with one another, besides rules, there is farther required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden's Duffessy.

'Till the last farthing is in structure spent. Dryden's Juv.
- FA'RTHINGALE. n. f. [This word has much exercised the etymology of Skinner, who at last seems to determine that it is derived from verru garde: if he had considered what veru signifies in Dutch, he might have found out the true sense.] A hoop, circles of whalebone used to spread the petticoat to a wide circumference.
With filken coats, and caps, and golden rings,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things. Shaksp.
Tell me,
What compass will you wear your farthingale? Shaksp.
Arthur wore in hall

FAT

FA'TALNESS. n. f. [from fatal.] Invincible necessity.
FATE. n. f. [fatum, Latin.]
1. Destiny; an eternal series of successive causes.
Necessity or chance

Approach not me; and what I will is fate. Milton.
There is a necessity in fate.
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate. Dryden.
You must obey me soon or late;
Why will you vainly struggle with your fate? Dryden.
When empire in its childhood first appears,
A watchful fate o'ersees its rising years. Dryden.
Random chance, or wilful fate,
Guides the shaft from Cupid's bow. A. Phillips.

2. Event predetermined.
Tell me what fates attend the duke of Suffolk?
By water shall he die, and take his end. Shakespeare.
3. a th; destruction.
Viewing a neighbouring hill, whose top of late
A chapel crown'd, till in the common fate
Th' adjoining abbey fell. Denham.
Looking, he feeds alone his famish'd eyes;
Feeds ling'ring death, but looking not he dies;
Yet still he chafes the longest way to fate,
Wasting at once his life and his estate. Dryden.
Courage uncertain dangers may abate;
But who can bear th' approach of certain fate? Dryden.
The whizzing arrow sings,
And bears thy fate, Antinous, on its wings. Pope.

4. Cause of death.
With full force his deadly bow he bent,
And feather'd fates among the mules and sumpters sent. Dryden.
FA'TED. adj. [from fate.]
1. Deceit by fate.
She fled her father's rage, and with a train
Driv'n by the southern blasts was fated here to reign. Dryden.
2. Determined in any manner by fate.
Bright Vulcanian arms,
Fated from force of steel by Stygian charms,
Suspended, shone on high. Dryden's Æn.
3. Endued with any quality by fate.
Her aukward love indeed was oddly fated;
She and her Polly were too near related. Prior.
4. Invested with the power of fatal determination. Peculiar to Shakespeare.

Thy fated sky
Gives us free scope. Shakespeare.
FA'THER. n. f. [pater, Saxon; acher, Eric. This word is found likewise in the Persian language.]
1. He by whom the son or daughter is begotten.
Father is a notion superinduced to the substance, or man, and refers only to an act of that thing called man, whereby he contributed to the generation of one of his own kind. Locke.
Son of Benafem, thy father faith it; the man by whom thou hast breath and life speaketh the word. Bacon.
He shall forget
Father and mother, and to his wife adhere. Milt. Pa. Lgt.

It was said
But that myself should be the root and father
Of many kings. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Abraham is the father of us all. Rom. iv. 16.
3. The appellation of an old man.
A poor blind man was accounted cunning in prognosticating weather: Epom, a lawyer, said in scorn, Tell me, father, when doth the sun change? The old man answered, when such a wicked lawyer as you goeth to heaven. Camden.
The title of any man revered for age, learning, and piety.
You shall find one well accompanied With reverend fathers and well learned bishops. Sh. R. III.
5. One who has given original to any thing good or bad.
Jubal was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ. Gen. iv. 21.
6. The ecclesiastical writers of the first centuries.
Men may talk of the fathers, and magnify the fathers, and seem to make the authority of the fathers next to infallible; and yet none expose them more to contempt than they which give such answers as these. Stillington.
7. One who acts with paternal care and tenderness.
I was a father to the poor. Job xxix. 16.
He hath made me a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house. Gen. xiv. 8.
8. The title of a popish confessor, particularly of a Jesuit.
Formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father. Shakespeare.
There was in this place a father of a convent, who was very much renowned for his piety and exemplary life; and as it is usual, under any great affliction, to apply themselves to the most eminent counsellors, our beautiful votary took the opportunity of confessing herself to this celebrated father. Add.
9. The title of a senator of old Rome.
From hence the race of Alban fathers come,
And the long glories of majestic Rome. Dryden's Virgil.

FAU

- Tygers and wolves shall in the ocean breed,
The whale and dolphin fatten on the mead,
And every element exchange its kind,
When thriving honestly in courts we find. Graville.
- FAUCOUS. adj. [fauces, Latin.]
1. Stupid; foolish; feeble of mind.
We pity or laugh at those fauces extravagants, while yet ourselves have a considerable dose of what makes them so. Glan.
2. Impotent; without force; illusory; alluding to an ignis fatus.
And when that flame finds combustible earth,
Thence fatus fires and meteors take their birth. Denham.
FATUITY. n. f. [fatus, French; from fatus, Latin.] Foolishness; weakness of mind; some degree of frenzy.
It had argued a very short fight of things, and extreme fatus of mind in me, to bind my own hands at their request. King Charles.
These symptoms were so high in some as to produce a sort of fatus or madness. Arbutnot on Air.
FATWITTED. adj. [fat and wit.] Heavy; dull; stupid.
Thou art so fatwitted with drinking old sack, and unbottoning thee after supper, and sleeping upon benches in the afternoon, that thou hast forgotten. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
FATVY. adj. [from fat.] Unctuous; oleaginous; greasy;
partaking of the nature of fat.
The like cloud, if oily or fatv, will not discharge; not because it sticketh faster, but because air preyeth upon water, and flame and fire upon oil. Bacon's Natural History.
The gourd
And thirsty cucumber, when they perceive
Th' approaching olive, with reluctant fly
Her fatv fibres, and with tendrils creep Diverse, detaching contact. Philips.
The common symptoms of the maritick scurvy are, a saline taste in the spittle, and a livid livor, sometimes with a fatv substance like a thin skin a-top. Arbutnot on Aliments.
FATVET. n. f. [fauvet, French; fauvet, Latin.] The pipe inserted into a vessel to give vent to the liquor, and stopped up by a peg or spigot. It is sometimes improperly written faffer.
You were out a good wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause between an orange-wife and a faffer-seller, and adjourned a controversy of three-pence to a second audience. Shakespeare.
If you are sent down to draw drink, and find it will not run, blow strongly into the fauvet, and it will immediately pour into your mouth. Swift's Direct. to the Butler.
FATVCHION. n. f. [See FALCHION.] A crooked sword.
A stately tomb, whose top a trumpet bore;
A soldier's fauvion, and a seaman's oar. Dryden's En.
FATVCEL. n. f. [French.] The fruit of a species of the palmetree. See PALM.
FATVLOUS. adj. [fauvilla, Latin.] Consisting of ashes.
As to fowling of strangers, from the fungus particles about the wicks of the candle, it only signifies a moist air about them, hindering the avoilation of light and the fauvillus particles. Bacon's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 22.
FATVCON. } See FALCON.
FATVCONRY. } See FALCONRY.
FAVLT. n. f. [faut, faut, Fr. falter, to be deficient, Spanish.
The f is sometimes sounded, and sometimes mute. In conversation it is generally suppressed.]
1. Offence; slight crime; somewhat liable to censure or objection.
The prophet chuseth rather to charge them with the faut of making a law unto themselves, than the crime of trangressing a law which God had made. Hosker, b. iii. f. 6.
He finds no faut with their opinion about the true God, but only that it was not clear and distinct enough. Stillington.
He that but conceives a crime in thought,
Contracts the danger of an actual faut.
Then what must he expect that still proceeds
To commit sin, and work up thoughts to deeds. Dryden.
If you like not my poem, the faut may possibly be in my writing; but more probably 'tis in your morals, which cannot bear the truth of it. Dryden.
They wholly mistake the nature of criticism, who think its business is principally to find faut.
To be desirous of a good name, and careful to do every thing, that we innocently may, to obtain it, is so far from being a faut, even in private persons, that it is their great and indispensible duty. Atterbury's Sermons.
Before his sacred name flies ev'ry faut,
And each exalted stanza teems with thought. Pope.
Which of our thum-cap'd ancestors found faut,
For want of fugar-tongs or spoons for salt? King.
Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain, nor find faut with the times. Swift.
2. Defect; want; absence.
I could tell to thee, as to one it pleases me, for faut of a

FAV

- better, to call my friend, I could be sad, and sad indeed
too. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
There is no straw given unto thy servants, and they lay unto us, make brick; and behold, thy servants are beaten, but the faut is in thine own people. Ex. v. 16.
3. Puzzle; difficulty: as, the enquirer is at a faut.
To FAVLT. v. n. [from the noun.] To be wrong; to fail.
Which moved him rather in eclogues than otherwise to write, minding to furnish our tongue in this kind wherein it faulteth. Spenser.
To FAVLT. v. a. To charge with a faut; to accuse.
For that I will not faut thee,
But for humbleness exalt thee. Old Song.
FAVLT. n. f. [from faut.] An offender; one who commits a faut.
Then she, behold the fautier here in sight;
This hand committed that supposed offence. Fairfax, b. ii.
FAVLTINDER. n. f. [faut and find.] A censurer; an ob-jector.
FAVLTILY. adv. [from fautily.] Not rightly; improperly;
defectively; erroneously.
FAVLTINESS. n. f. [from fautily.]
1. Badness; viciousness; evil disposition.
When her judgment was to be practised in knowing fauti-ness by his first tokens, she was like a young fawn, who coming in the wind of the hunters, doth not know whether it be a thing or no to be eschewed. Sidney, b. ii.
2. Delinquency; actual offences.
The inhabitants will not take it in evil part, that the fauti-ness of their people heretofore is by us so far forth laid open.
Hosker, Preface.
FAVLTLESS. adj. [from faut.] Without faut; perfect; completely excellent.
Where for our sins he fautless suffered pain,
There where he died, and where he liv'd again. Fairfax.
Who durst thy fautless figure thus deface? Dryden's En.
Whoever thinks a fautless piece to see,
Thinks what ne'er was, nor is, nor e'er shall be. Pope.
FAVLT. adj. [faut, French; from faut.]
1. Guilty of a faut; blameable; criminal; not innocent.
The king doth speak as one which is fauty. 2 Sa. xiv. 13.
Can thus
Th' image of God in man, created once
So goodly and erect, though fauty since!
To such unlighty sufferings be debas'd! Milton's Par. Lost.
2. Wrong; erroneous.
The form of polity by them set down for perpetuity, is three ways fauty; fauty in omitting some things which in Scripture are of that nature, as, namely, the difference that ought to be of pastors, when they grow to any great multitude; fauty in requiring doctors, deacons, and widows, as things of perpetual necessity by the law of God, which in truth are nothing less; fauty also in urging some things by Scripture mutable, as their lay-elders. Hosker, b. iii.
3. Defective; bad in any respect; not fit for the use intended.
By accident of a fauty helmet that Parker had on, he was stricken into the mouth at the first course, for that he died presently. Bacon's Henry VII.
To FAVOUR. v. a. [favor, Latin.]
1. To support; to regard with kindness; to be propitious to;
to countenance.
Of all the race of silver-winged flies
Was none more favourable, nor more fair,
Whilst heaven did favor his felicities,
Than Clarion, the eldest son and heir
Of Muscarol. Spenser.
The self-same gods that arm'd the queen of Troy,
May favor Tamora the queen of Goths. Shak. Tit. Andr.
Men favor wonders. Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 495.
Fortune so favoured him, that the town at his first coming surrendered unto him. Kneller's History of the Turks.
The good Aeneas am I call'd; a name,
While fortune favoured, not unknown to fame. Dryden.
Oh happy youth! and favoured of the skies,
Distinguish'd care of guardian deities. Pope's Odyssey, b. iii.
2. To assist with advantages or conveniences.
No one place about it is weaker than another, to favor an enemy in his approaches. Addison's Whig Examiner.
3. To resemble in feature.
The porter owned that the gentleman favoured his master. Spenser.
4. To conduce to; to contribute.
FAVOUR. n. f. [favor, Latin; favor, French.]
1. Countenance; kindness; kind regard; propitious aspect.
It pleas'd your majesty to turn your looks
Of favor from myself, and all our house. Shakespeare, H. IV.
The child Samuel was in favor both with the Lord and also with men. 1 Sa. ii. 26.
The race is not to the swift, nor yet favor to men of skill. Ecd. ix. 11.

FAV

- His dreadful navy, and his lovely mind,
Gave him the fear and favor of mankind. Waller.
This favor, had it been employed on a more deserving subject, had been an effect of justice in your nature; but, as placed on me, is only charity. Dryden's Aurengzebe, Preface.
At play, among strangers, we are apt to find our hopes and wishes engaged on a sudden in favor of one side more than another. Swift.
2. Support; defence; vindication.
The pleasures which these Scriptures ascribe to religion, are of a kind very different from those in favor of which they are here alleged. Rogers, Sermon 15.
3. Kindness granted.
All favours and punishments passed by him, all offices and places of importance were distributed to his favourites. Sidney.
O, my royal master!
The gods, in favor to you, made her cruel. A. Phillips.
4. Lenity; mildness; mitigation of punishment.
I could not discover the lenity and favor of this sentence;
but conceived it rather to be rigorous than gentle. Gulliv. Trav.
5. Leave; good will; pardon.
Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.
—Give me your favor; my dull brain was wrought
With things forgot. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Yet e're we enter into open acts,
With favours, 'twere no loss if 't might be inquir'd
What the condition of these arms would be. B. Johns. Cat.
They got not the land by their own sword; but thy right hand and thine arm, and the light of thy countenance, because thou hast a favor upon them. Pf. xlv. 3.
Come down, said Reynard, let us treat of peace:
A peace, with all my soul, said Chanticleer;
But, with your favor, I will treat it here. Dryden.
6. Object of favour; person or thing favoured.
All these his wondrous works, but chiefly man,
His chief delight and favor; him, for whom
All these his works to wondrous he ordain'd. Milt. P. L.
7. Something given by a lady to be worn.
And every one his love-suit will advance
Unto his several mistresses, which they'll know
By favours several which they did bestow. Shakespeare.
It is received that it helpeth to continue love, if one wear the hair of the party beloved; and perhaps a glove, or other like favor, may as well do it. Bacon's Natural History.
A blue ribband tied round the sword-arm, I conceive to be the remains of that custom of wearing a mistress's favor on such occasions of old. Spenser, N^o. 436.
8. Anything worn openly as a token.
Here, Fluellen, wear thou this favor for me, and stick it in thy cap: when Alanfon and myself were down together, I plucked it this glove from his helmet. Shakespeare, Henry V.
9. Feature; countenance.
That is only suitable in laying a foul complexion upon a filthy favor, setting forth both in filthiness. Sidney.
Young though thou art, thine eye
Hath staid upon some favor that it loves. Shakespeare.
Dislike thy favor with an upstared beard. Shakespeare, Othello.
There's no goodness in thy face: if Antony
Be free and healthful, why so tart a favor
To trumpet such good tidings. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
Yet well I remember
The favours of these men: were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, all hail! to me? Shakespeare, R. II.
A youth of fine favor and shape. Bacon's Henry VII.
By their virtuous behaviour they compensate hardness of their

- FE'E. n. f. [feoh, Saxon; fee, Danish, cattle; feudum, low Latin; feu, Scottish.]
1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgment of superiority to a higher lord. All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgment of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum: for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord, to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or

- be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum à minino, that is, the very property or demefine in any land, but the prince in right of his crown; for though he that has fee has ius perpetuum & uile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it to the lords; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and that whereof we are seized in thofe general words, To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are seized to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body, &c. And fee-tail is either general or fpecial: general is that land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail fpecial is that where a man and his wife are seized of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Cowell.
- Now like a lawyer, when he land would let,
Or fel'd fee-fimples in his matter's name. Hubbard's Tale Here's the lord of the foil come to feize me for a ftray, for entering his fee-fimple without leave. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

In corporal pleasure lies, and careless ease. Milt. Par. Reg.

- So the felicities of her wonderful reign may be complete. Atterbury's Sermons.

- How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel! Rogers, Sermon iii.

- FELINE. adj. [felinus, Latin.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.

- Even as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail, which is felinus, or a long taper. Grew's Museum.

- FELL. adj. [felle, Saxon.]
1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.

- He seemed fury, discord, madness fell,
Flew from his lap when he unfolds the same. Fairfax, b. ii.

- So fell'st foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep,
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shak.

- That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.
I know thee, love! wild as the raging main,
More fell than tigers on the Lybian plain. Pope's Autumn.

- Scorning all the taming arts of man,
The keen hyena, fell'st of the fell. Tomson's Spring.

- FELL. n. f. [felle, Saxon.] The skin; the hide.

FEL

- It seemed fury, discord, madness fell,

E'er since pursue me. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.
I know thee, love! wild as the raging main,
More fell than tigers on the Lybian plain. Pope's Autumn.

- Scorning all the taming arts of man,
The keen hyena, fell'st of the fell. Tomson's Spring.

- FELL. n. f. [felle, Saxon.] The skin; the hide.

- Wipe thine eye;
The gougiers shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep. Shakespeare's King Lear.

- The time has been my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shrike; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir. Shak. Macbeth.

- TO FELL. v. a. [fellen, German.]
1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.

- Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. Shak. Henry V.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a falling blow, now strikes again. Daniel.

- Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stool, and felled him. Raleigh.

- His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was felled. Hawel's Vocal Porreft.

- On their whole host I flew Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell'd
Their choicest youth: they only liv'd who fled. Milt. Agon.

- Whom with such force he struck he fell'd him down,
And cleft the circle of his golden crown. Dryden.

- I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

2. To hew down; to cut down.
Then would he seem a farmer that would fell Bargains of woods, which he did lately fell. Hubb. Tale.

- Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flam'd their fauchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck,
There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak. Dryden.

- FELL. The preterite of To fell.

- None on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell
By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton.

- FE'LLER. n. f. [from fell.] One that hews down.
Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us. Is. xiv. 8.

- FELL'FLOUS. adj. [fel and flous, Latin.] Flowing with gall. Di't.

- FE'LMONGER. n. f. [from fell.] A dealer in hides.

- FE'LLNESS. n. f. [from fell.] Cruelty; savageness; fury; rage.
When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,
For very fellest loud he 'gan to weep. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

- FE'LLOR. n. f. [felges, Danish.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written fally or felly.
Out, out, thou trumpet fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and felles from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n. Shak. Sp.

- Their axle-trees, naves, felles, and spokes were all molten. Kings vii. 33.

- FELLOW. n. f. [gelfu, to follow, Minnew; from fe, faith, and lag, bound, Saxon; fuma; fellow, Scottish.]

1. A companion; one with whom we consort.
In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end. Milton's Schoolmaster.

- To be your fellow,
You may deny me; but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no. Shakespeare's Tempest.

- Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love? Dryden.

2. An associate; one united in the same affair.
Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabric mounts the walls. Dryden's Virg.

3. One of the same kind.
Let partial friends still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may Without controul upon their fellows prey. Waller.

- A shepherd had one favourite dog: he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of any of his fellows. L'Estrange's Fables.

- FE'LLOR. n. f. [from fell.] One that hews down.

- Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us. Is. xiv. 8.

- FELL'FLOUS. adj. [fel and flous, Latin.] Flowing with gall. Di't.

- FE'LMONGER. n. f. [from fell.] A dealer in hides.

- FE'LLNESS. n. f. [from fell.] Cruelty; savageness; fury; rage.

- When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,
For very fellest loud he 'gan to weep. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

- FE'LLOR. n. f. [felges, Danish.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written fally or felly.

- Out, out, thou trumpet fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and felles from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n. Shak. Sp.

- Their axle-trees, naves, felles, and spokes were all molten. Kings vii. 33.

FEL

4. Equal; peer.
Chieftain of the rest
I chose him here: the earth shall him allow;
His fellows late, shall be his subjects now. Fairfax, b. i.

- So you are to be hereafter fellows, and no longer servants. Sidney.

5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.
When virtue is lodged in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice: the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows. Adams's Spectator, No. 86.

6. One like another; as, this knave hath not his fellow.

7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness; sometimes with esteem; but generally with some degree of contempt.

- This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
—The same indeed; a very valiant fellow. Shak. Othello.

- An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made his peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crushed, but that he saved himself upon his horns. Bacon's Apophthegm 4.

- Full fifteen thousand lusty fellows
With fire and sword the fort maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.

8. A word of contempt: the foolish mortal; the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.

- Those great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleased the eternal justice to make them suffer death by their hands. Sidney, b. ii.

- Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Rodorigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd:
He's almost slain, and Rodorigo dead. Shak. Othello.

- I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Shakespeare's Tempest.

- Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputation's banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood. Shak. Henry IV.

- How oft the fight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? for hadst not thou been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind. Shak. K. John.

- The Moor's abus'd by some most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow. Shak. Othello.

- The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet. L'Estrange.

- As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Sisyphian seed
By fraud and theft alters his father's breed. Dryden.

- You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow, as this Mr. Wood, could have got his majesty's broad seal. Swift.

- You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cozier like, the parson will be drunk,
Which makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella. Pope's Essay on Man.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.
The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man. Hayward.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues.

- TO FELLOW. v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match.
Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

- Imagination,
With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow'st nothing. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

- FELLOW-COMMONER. n. f.
1. One who has the same right of common.

- He cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellowcommoners, all mankind. Lake.

FEL

- Nor less think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire Gladly into the ways of God with man. Milt. Parad. Lost.
Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted care
Than the bright dame's we serve. Waller.
Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants to the same heavenly matter while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children. Steele's Sermons.
FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. f. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.
Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation. Shakesp.
Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and another. Phil. ii. 25.
FELLOW-STUDENT. n. f. One who studies in company with another.
I pray thee, do not mock me, fellow-student;
I think it was to see my mother's wedding. Shakesp. Hamlet.
If you have no fellow-student at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance. Watts's Logick.
FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. f. One who lives under the same government.
The bleeding condition of their fellow-subjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends. Swift.
FELLOW-SUFFERER. n. f. One who shares in the same evils;
one who partakes the same sufferings with another.
How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer? And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve the wants of others?
Dryden's Fables, Dedication.
We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow-sufferers. Addison's Spectator.
FELLOW-WRITER. n. f. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject.
Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them. Addison's Spectator.
FELLOW-FEELING. n. f. [fellow and feeling.]
1. Sympathy.
It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellow-feeling of the misfortune of my brother. L'Estrange.
2. Combination; joint interest.
Even your milkwoman and your nurserymaid have a fellow-feeling. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
FELLOWLIKE. adj. [fellow and like.] Like a companion;
FELLOWLY. adv. on equal terms; companionable.
All which good parts he graceth with a good fellowlike, kind, and respectful carriage. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.
One feed for another, to make an exchange.
With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange. Tusser.
FELLOWSHIP. n. f. [from fellow and ship.]
1. Companionship; comfort; society.
This boy cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hand for fellowship. Shak. Coriolan.
From blissful bow'rs
Of amaranthine shade, fountain, or spring,
By the waters of life, where'er they fat
In fellowships of joys, the fons of light Halted. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi. l. 80.
There is no man but God puts excellent trings into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship. Calamy's Sermons.
God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cement of society. Locke.
2. Association; confederacy; combination.
We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shakesp. Henry V.
Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any formally agreed amongst themselves what to do, or not to do.
Hobbes, b. i. f. 10.
Most of the other Christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knut's History of the Turks.
3. Equality.
4. Partnership; joint interest.
Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load. Parad. Reg.
O love! thou sternly do'st thy power maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship didst claim. Dryden.
5. Company; state of being together.
The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a fall! Shakesp. Othello.
6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.
In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon's Essays.

FEM

7. Fitness and fondness for festal entertainments, with good prefixed.
He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarendon, b. viii.
8. An establishment in the college with share in its revenue.
Corusades having, by the most extreme parsimony, saved thirty-four pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went up to London. Swift.
9. [In arithmetic.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that they may every man have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss. Cocker's Arithmetic.
10. A rule in arithmetic, by which two or more independent operations of the rule of three may divide any given number into unequal parts, proportional to certain other numbers.
It is so called, because the more common and useful application thereof is in the division of gains, losses, or other things, among partners in company. Maitland.
FEL'LY. adv. [from fellow.] Cruelly; inhumanly; savagely;
barbarously.
Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;
As is a tiger, that with greediness
Hunts alter blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast, doth follow him oppress. Spenser's Sonnets.
FEL'DE-SE. n. f. [In law.] He that committeth felony by murdering himself.
FELON. n. f. [from felon, French; felis, low Latin; pel, Saxon.]
1. One who has committed a capital crime.
I apprehend thee for a felon here. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.
And often have you brought the wily fox,
Chas'd even amid' the folds; and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the murderous deed. Dryden.
2. A whitlow; a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.
The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wise's Surgery.
FELON. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.
Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,
Might be the cause of so impatient plight!
What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,
Hath stirred up to mischievous despite!
Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,
Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate. Pope's Odyssey.
FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traitorous; villa-nous; malignant; perfidious; destructive.
This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Watson.
O thievesight night!
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd the lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mislead and lonely traveller?
In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen and dies. Dryden.
FELONIOUSLY. adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.
FELONOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; felonious.
I am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonious force of mine enemy. Spenser's Pastorals.
FELONY. n. f. [from felonie, Fr. felonia, low Latin, from felon.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enormous crime.
I will make it felony to drink small beer. Shakesp. Henry VI.
FELT. The preterite of FEEL, which see.
1. Cloth made of wool united without weaving.
It were a delicate stratagem to those
A troop of horse with felt. Shakespeare's King Lear.
2. A hide or skin.
To know whether sheep are found or not, see that the felt be loose. Morimer's Husbandry.
To FELT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite without weaving.
The same wool one man felt into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into kersey. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
To FELT. v. a. [from felt.] To clot together like felt.
His felted locks, that on his bosom fell,
On rugged mountains briars and thorns resemble. Fairfax.
FELUCCA. n. f. [from felu, Fr. felon, Arab.] A small open boat with six oars. Ditt.
FEMALE. n. f. [from fel, French; fenella, Latin.] A female one of the sex which brings young.
God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Gen. i. 27.
Man, more divine,
Lord of the wide world, and wide wat'ry seas,
Indiv'd with intellectual sense and soul,
Are matters to their females, and their lords. Shakespeare.
FEMALE. adj.
1. Not masculine; belonging to a she.
If by a female hand he had foreseen
He was to die, his wish had rather been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen. Dryden.
2. FEMALE

FEN

2. FEMALE Rhymes. Double rhymes so called, because in French, from which the term is taken, they end in a weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:
Th' excess of heat is but a fable;
We know the torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.
The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems. Dryden's Preface to Ann. Mirab.
FEME COVERT. n. f. [French.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron. Blount.
FEME SOLE. n. f. [French.] A single woman; an unmarried woman.
FEMINAILITY. n. f. [from femina, Latin.] Female nature.
If in the minority of natural vigour the parts of femininity take place, upon the increase or growth thereof the masculine appears. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.
FEMININE. adj. [from femininus, Latin.]
1. Of the sex that brings young; female.
Thus we chastise the god of wine
With water that is feminine,
Until the cooler nymph abate
His wrath, and so congregate. Cleaveland.
2. Soft; tender; delicate.
Her heav'nly form
Angelick, but more soft and feminine. Milton's Parad. Lost.
3. Effeminate; emasculated.
Ninias was no man of war at all, but altogether feminine and subjected to ease and delicacy. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
FEMININE. n. f. A she; one of the sex that brings young;
a female.
O! why did God create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature? And not fill the world at once
With men, as angels, without feminine? Milt. Par. Lost.
FEMORAL. adj. [from femoralis, Latin.] Belonging to the thigh.
The largest crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation. Sharp's Surgery.
FEN. n. f. [penn, Saxon; venne, Dutch.] A marsh; low flat and moist ground; a moor; a bog.
Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen. Abbott's Description of the World.
I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen. Shakesp. Coriolan.
You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,
As reek o' th' rotten fen. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
The surface is of black fen earth. Woodward on Fossils.
He to Portina's wat'ry marshes went;
A long canal the muddy fen divides,
And with a clear unfilmy'd current glides. Addison.
FENBERRY. n. f. [fen and berry.] A kind of blackberry. Skinner.
FENCE. n. f. [from defence.]
1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.
That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. Decay of Picty.
There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Estrange, Fable 167.
To put them out of their parents view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.
Let us bear this awful corps to Caesar,
And lay it in his fight, that it may stand
A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath. Addison's Cato.
2. Inclosure; mound; hedge.
In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main;
Th' eternal fences overlap,
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden's Horace.
I'll mention make
Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?
Or the disdainful sea, that, shut from thence,
Roars round the structure, and invades the fence? Dryden.
Employ their wiles and unavailing care,
To pass the fences and surprise the fair. Pope.
3. The art of fencing; defence.
I bruised my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a matter of fence. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
4. Skill in defence.
I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despite his nice fence and his active practice. Shakespeare.
To FENCE. v. a.
1. To inclose; to secure by an inclosure or hedge.
Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain Destroyed have, each field to waste is laid;
In fenced towers bestow'd is their grain,
Before thou cam'st this kingdom to invade. Fairfax, b. ii.
He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and set darkness in my paths. Job xix. 8.

FEN

- Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews. Job x. 11.
He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls. 2 Mac. xii. 13.
See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail, of other inclosure. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. To guard.
So much of adders wisdom I have learnt,
To fence my ear against thy forceries. Milton's Agonistes.
With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,
Fenc'd from the thorns, and trod the deep descent. Dryden.
To FENCE. v. n.
1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons.
He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.
2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.
Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Locke.
3. To fight according to art.
If a throstle sing, he falls straight a capering;
He will fence with his own shadow. Shak. Merch. of Venice.
A beauteous heifer in the wood is bred;
The stooping warriors, aiming head to head,
Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound
The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;
They fence and push, and, pushing, loudly roar,
Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore. Dryden.
A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies and gamesters company. Locke.
These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelplying. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
FENCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without inclosure; open.
Each motion of the heart rises to fury,
And love in their weak bosoms is a rage
As terrible as hate, and as destructive;
So the wind roars o'er the wide fenel's ocean,
And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,
Alike from North, from South, from East, from West. Roswell's Jane Shore.
FENCER. n. f. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.
Calmness is great advantage: he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.
A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick, that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Digby.
FENCIBLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence. Addison.
FENCINGMASTER. n. f. [fence and master.] One who teaches the use of weapons.
FENCINGSCHOOL. n. f. [fence and school.] A place in which the use of weapons is taught.
If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencing-school, and every day exercising. Locke.
To FEND. v. a. [from defend.] To keep off; to shut out.
Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,
With fern beneath, to fend the bitter cold. Dryden's Virgil.
To FEND. v. n. To dispute; to shift off a charge.
The dexterous management of terms, and being able to send and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning;
but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.
FENDER. n. f. [from fend.]
1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall from rolling forward to the floor.
2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence.
FENERATION. n. f. [from generatio, Latin.] Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.
The hare figured not only puffanimity and timidity from its temper, but feneration and usury from its fecundity and superfecundation. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.
FENUGREEK. n. f. [from fenum Græcum, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes a pod, somewhat plain, shaped like a horn, and full of seeds, for the most part rhomboid or kidney-shaped. Miller.
FENNEL. n. f. [from feniculum, Latin.] A plant of strong scent.
It is an umbelliferous plant, whose leaves are divided into capillaceous jags: the petals of the flower are intire, and placed orbicularly, expanding in form of a rose: each flower is succeeded by two oblong thick gibbous seeds, chauced on one side, and plain on the other. Miller.
A fav'ry odour blown, more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n. Milton.

mation of the intestine particles of a mixt body, arising usually from the operation of some active acid matter, which rarifies, exalts, and subtilizes the soft and sulphureous particles: as when heaven or yest rarifies, lightens, and ferments bread or wort, &c. And this motion differs much from that usually called ebullition or effervescence, which is a violent boiling and struggling between an acid and an alkali, when mixed together. Harris.

The juice of grapes, after fermentation, will yield a spiritus ardens. Boyle.

A man, by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new kind of fermentation; which works them into a finer body, and makes them much clearer than they were before. Collier of Friendship.

The sap, in fluent dence,

And lively fermentation, mountings, spreads

All this innumerable colour'd scene of things. Thomson.

FERMENTATIVE. adj. [from ferment.] Causing fermentation; having the power to cause fermentation.

Aromatical spirits destroy by their fermentative heat. Arbut.

FERN. n. s. [from fern, Saxon.] A plant.

The male fern is common on the stumps of trees in woods, and on the banks of ditches: the leaves are formed of a number of small pinnules, denuded on the edges, and set close by one another on slender ribs. On the back of these pinnules are produced the seeds, small and extremely numerous. Deciduous of the root and diet-drinks have been used in chronic disorders and obstructions. The country people esteem it a sovereign remedy for the rickets in children. Hill.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood,

Horrid with fern, and intricate with thorn;

Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dryden's Aeneid.

There are great varieties of fern in different parts of the world; but they are seldom cultivated in gardens. Miller.

FERNY. adj. [from fern.] Overgrown with fern.

The herd suffic'd, did late repair

To ferny heaths, and to their forest-lare. Dryden.

FERO'CIOUS. adj. [from ferox, Latin; feroce, French.]

1. Savage; fierce.

2. Ravenous; rapacious.

The hare, that becometh a prey unto man, unto beasts and fowls of the air, is fruitful even unto superfecundation; but the lion and ferocious animal hath young ones but seldom, and but one at a time. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 16.

Smidley roars in majesty of mud;

Shaking the horrors of his ample brows,

And each ferocious feature grim with ooze. Pope's Dunciad, b. ii.

I went down to the river Brent in the ordinary ferry. Addis.

2. The passage over which the ferryboat passes.

FERRYMAN. n. s. [from ferry and man.] One who keeps a ferry; one who for hire transports goods and passengers over the water.

I past, methought, the melancholy flood,

With that grim ferryman, which poets write of,

Unto the kingdom of perpetual night. Shakef. Richard III.

The common ferryman of Egypt, that waited over the dead bodies from Memphis, was made by the Greeks the ferryman of hell, and solemn stories raised after him. Brown.

The guilty ferryman of hell deny'd

Aeneas entrance, 'till he knew his guide. Rafcoman.

FERTH. or forth. Common terminations are the same as in English an army; coming from the Saxon word fyrð. Gibson.

FERTILE. adj. [from fertile, French; fertilis, Latin.]

1. Fruitful; abundant; plenteous.

I had hope of France,

As firmly as I hope for fertile England. Shakef. Henry VI.

I have had a large, a fair, and a pleasant field; so fertile, that it has given me two harvests in a Summer. Dryden.

I ask whether in the uncultivated waste of America, left to nature, without any improvement, a thousand acres yield the needy inhabitants as many conveniences of life as ten acres of equally fertile land do in Devonshire? Lake.

View the wide earth adorn'd with hills and woods,

Rich in her herds, and fertile by her floods. Blackm. Creat.

2. With of before the thing produced.

The earth is fertile of all kind of grain. Camden's Remains.

This happy country is extremely fertile, as of those above, so likewise of its productions under ground. Woodward.

FERTILENESS. n. s. [from fertile.] Fruitfulness; fecundity.

TO FERTILIZE. v. a. [from fertile.] To fecundate; to fertilize; to make fruitful or productive.

A cock will in one day fertilize the whole racemation or cluster of eggs, which are not excluded in many weeks after.

FERTILITY. n. s. [from fertilitas, Latin.] Fecundity; abundance; fruitfulness; plenteousness.

I will go root away

The noisom weeds, that without profit suck

The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers. Shak. Rich. II.

Paradise itself exceeded in beauty and fertility; and these places had but a resemblance thereof. Religion's History.

To inundations Egypt, through which the Nile flows, and the Indies owe their extraordinary fertility, and those mighty crops they produce after these waters are withdrawn. Woodw.

TO FERTILIZE. v. a. [from fertile, French.] To make fruitful; to make plenteous; to make productive; to fecundate.

Rain-water carries along with it a sort of terrestrial matter that fertilizes the land, as being proper for the formation of vegetables. Woodward's Natural History.

nacles on the right hand. Eccles. xxi. 19.

Drawing after me the chains and fetters whereunto I have been thirteen years tied, I have by other mens errors failed.

Raleigh's Apology.

Passion's too fierce to be in fetters bound,
And nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.

The wretch in double fetters bound,
Your potent mercy may release. Prior.

I thought her pride
Had broke your fetters, and assur'd you freedom. A. Phill.

TO FETTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to enchain;
to shackle; to tie.

Neither her great worthiness nor his own suffering for her,
could fetter his rickleness. Sidney.

More than my thanks and writs. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Fetter strong madnes in a filken thread;
Charm ach with air, and agony with words. Shakspeare.

Doth a master chide his servant, because he doth not come, yet knows that the servant is chained and fettered, so as he cannot move? Bramhall against Hobbes.

A chain which man to fetter man has made;
By artifice impos'd, by fear obey'd. Prior.

TO FETTER. v. n. [A cant word from fet.] To do trifling business; to ply the hands without labour.

When your master is most busy in company, come in and pretend to settle about the room; and if he chides, say you thought he rung the bell. Swift's Direct. to the Footman.

FETTER. n. f. [from fetid, Latin.] Any animal in embrio; any thing yet in the womb; any thing unborn.

Nor are we at leisure to examine that paradox of Hippocrates, which some learned physicians have of late revived, that the fetus respire in the womb. Boyle.

FETTER. n. f. [from fetid, Latin.] Quarrel; contention; opposition; war.

Though men would find such mortal fetters
In sharing of their publick goods. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.

In former ages it was a constant policy of France to raise and cherish intestine fetters and discords in the ile of Great Britain. Addison's Freeholder.

Scythia mourns
Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions
Lie half unpeopled by the fetters of Rome. Addison's Cato.

FETTER. adj. [from fetid, low Latin.] Pertaining to fess, fess, or tenures by which lands are held of a superiour lord.

FETTER. n. f. A dependance; something held by tenure;
a fee; a fee.

Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of England. Hale.

FEUDATORY. n. f. [from feudal.] One who holds not in chief,
but by some conditional tenure from a superiour.

The duke of Parma was reasonably well tempted to be true to that enterprise, by no less promise than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the signory in chief of the pope, and the protection of the king of Spain.

Bacon's War with Spain.

FEVER. n. f. [from febris, French; febris, Latin.] A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns: It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermitent.

Think'st thou the fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation? Shak. H. V.

Will it give place to flexure and low bending? Shak. H. V.

Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever he sleeps well. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Should not a ling'ring fever be remov'd;
Because it long has rag'd within my blood? Dryden.

He had never dream'd in his life, 'till he had the fever he was then newly recovered of. Locke.

TO FEVER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a fever.

The white hand of a lady fever thee!
Shake to look on't. Shakspeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

FEVERET. n. f. [from fever.] A light fever; febricula.

A light feveret, or an old quartan ague, is not a sufficient excuse for non-appearance. Ayliffe's Parergon.

FEVERFEW. n. f. [febris and fugo, Latin.]

It has a fibrous root: the leaves are conjugated, and divided into many segments: the cup of the flower is squamose and hemispherical: the flowers grow in an umbel upon the top of the stalks, and the rays of the flower are generally white.
The species are nine; but the first, called common feverfew, is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England; but is, however, cultivated in medicinal gardens. Müller.

FEVERISH. adj. [from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever.
To other climates beasts and birds retire,
And feverish nature burns in her own fire. Creech.

When an animal that gives suck turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow. Arbutnot on Aliment.

2. Tending to a fever.
A feverish disorder disabled me. Swift to Pope.

3. Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.
We toss and turn about our feverish will,
When all our ease must come by lying still;
For all the happiness mankind can gain,
Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

4. Hot; burning.
And now four days the sun had seen our woes,
Four nights the moon beheld th' incessant fire;
It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose,
And farther from the feverish North retire. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

FEVERISHNESS. n. f. [from feverish.] A light disorder of the feverish kind.

FEVEROUS. adj. [from fevus, French, from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever, or ague.
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
Were feverous, and did tremble. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

2. Having the nature of a fever.
All feverous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.
It hath been noted by the ancients, that southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain, not. Bacon's Natural History.

FEVERY. adj. [from fever.] Diseased with a fever.

O Rome, thy head
Is drown'd in sleep, and all thy body fevery. B. Johnf. Catil.

FEUILLAGE. n. f. [French.] A bunch or row of leaves.

I have done Homer's head; and I inclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval.

Fervas to Pope.

FEUILLEMORT. n. f. [French.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to philemors.

FEUTERER. n. f. A dogkeeper: perhaps the cleaner of the kennel.

FEW. adj. [few, peopa, Saxon; fewa, Danish.]

1. Not many; not in a great number.

We are left but few of many. Jer.

So much the thirst of honour fires the blood;
So many would be great, so few be good;
For who would virtue for herself regard,
Or wed without the portion of reward? Dryd. Juvenal.

On Winter seas we fewer storms behold,
Than foul diseases that infect the fold. Dryden's Virg. Geor.

Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety. Locke.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score. Pope's Hor. Imitat.

Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few. Swift.

The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age, have come up to that character. Berkley to Pope.

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.

To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this. Hooters, b. v. f. 22.

So having said, he thus to Eve in few:
 Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done? Milton.
 Thus Jupiter in few unfolds the charge. Dryden's Æn.
 The firm resolve I here in few disclose. Pope's Odyssey.
FE'WEL. n. f. [few, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire: as firewood, coal.
 If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions and broils? Hooker, Dedication.

Others may give the fewel or the fire;
 But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire. Denham.
 A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it. Bentley's Sermons.

To FE'WEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.
 Never, alas! the dreadful name,
 That fewels the infernal flame. Cowley.

FE'WNESS. n. f. [from few.]
 1. Paucity; smallness of number.
 There, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers of the rest with whom they are embodied. Dryden's Preface to the Hind and Panther.

2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness.
Fe'wness and truth, 'tis thus. Shakef. Meaf. for Measure.

To FEY. v. a. [veghen, Dutch.] To cleanse a ditch of mud.
 Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
 That all a dry Summer no water will yield,
 By feying and casting that mud upon heaps,
 Commodities many the husbandman reaps. Tuff. Husband.

FIB. n. f. [A cant word among children.] A lie; a falsehood.
 Destroy his fib or sophistry; in vain,
 The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope's Epistles.

I so often lie,
 Scarce Harvey's self has told more *fib*s than I. Pope.

To FIB. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lies; to speak falsely.

If you have any particular mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me: Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

FIBBER. n. f. [from fib.] A teller of *fib*s.
FIBRE. n. f. [fibres, Fr. fibra, Latin.] A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
 And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

2. A fibres, in physics, is an animal thread, of which there are different kinds: some are soft, flexible, and a little elastic; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Now of all these some are very sensible, and others destitute of all sense: some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others, on the contrary, so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them, when examined with a microscope, appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries and muscles. And again, by the various texture and different combination of some or all of those parts, the more compound organs are framed; such as the lungs, stomach, liver, legs and arms, the sum of all which make up the body. Quincy.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
 And every slacken'd fib drops its hold,
 Like nature letting down the springs of life:
 The name of father awes me still. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

FIBRIL. n. f. [fibrilla, French.] A small fibre or string.
 The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells. Cheyne's 1st Prin.

FIBROUS. adj. [fibreux, French, from fibra.] Composed of fibres or stamina.

The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture. Bacon's Natural History.

I saw Petreus' arms employ'd around
 A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;
 This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
 The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. Dryden.

The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FIBULA. n. f. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.

FICKLE. adj. [picol, Saxon.] Changeable; wavering; unsteady; mutable; changeable; without steady adherence.

Remember where we are,
 In France amongst a fickle wavering nation. Shak. Hen. VI.
 A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
 Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows. Shak. K. Lear.
 Or likeliest hovering dreams,
 The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train. Milton.
 They know how fickle common lovers are;
 Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
 For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.
 We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
 Who change the constant lover for the new. Prior.

2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.
 He would be loth
 Us to abolish; left the adversary
 Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God
 Most favours! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

FICKLENESS. n. f. [from fickle.] Inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baccha of whom the complained. Sidney.

Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
 In choice and change of thy dear loved dame. Fairy Queen.
 I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,
 Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness. Shakef. Henry VI.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences. Addison's Freeholders, N^o. 25.

Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell, I found that what the liked one day he disliked another. Addison.

FICKLY. adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.
 Do not now,
 Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes
 Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
 To raise a present pow'r that's fickly held
 By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southern.

FICCO. n. f. [Italian.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expressing a fig for you.

Having once recovered his fortrefs, he then gives the fig to all that his adversaries can by siege, force, or famine attempt against him. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

FICTILE. adj. [fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.

The cause of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth. Bacon's Nat. History.

FICTITON. n. f. [fictio, Latin; fictio, French.]
 1. The act of feigning or inventing.
 If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fictio of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it? Stillingfleet.

Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting: there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fictio. Dryden's Dunciad.

2. The thing feigned or invented.
 If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
 By wife discourse, sweet tunes, or poets fictions;
 If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
 While that my soul, the, the lives in affliction. Sidney.
 So also was the fictio of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Evah. Raleigh.

3. A falsehood; a lie.
FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictus, Latin] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior.
 With fancy'd rules and arbitrary laws
 Matter and motion man restrains,
 And study'd lines and fictitious circles draws. Prior.

FICTITIOUSLY. adv. [fictitius, Latin.]
 1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.
 Draw him strictly so,
 That all who view the piece may know
 He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.

2. Feigned; imaginary.
 The human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty. Pope.

3. Not real; not true.
 Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addison's Spectator.

FICTITIOUSLY. adv. [from fictitious.] Falsely; counterfeitedly.
 These pieces are fictitiously set down, and have no copy in nature. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. v. c. 20.

FID. n. f. [fidia, Italian.] A pointed iron with which seamen untwist their cords. Skinner.

FIDDLE. n. f. [vièle, Saxon; veedel, Dutch; fidul, German; fidula, Latin; fidl, Erse.]
 1. A stringed instrument of music; a violin. 14

FIDDLE. n. f. [vièle, Saxon; veedel, Dutch; fidul, German; fidula, Latin; fidl, Erse.]
 1. A stringed instrument of music; a violin. 14

In trials of musical skill the judges did not crown the fiddle, but the performer. Stillingfleet.

The adventure of the bear and fiddle
 Is sung; but breaks off in the middle. Hudibras.
 She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow over every part of the strings; but could not, for her heart, find whereabout the tune lay. Addison's Guardian, N^o. 98.

To FIDDLE. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To play upon a fiddle.
 Themistocles being desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said he could not fiddle, but he could make a small town a great city. Bacon's Essays.

Others import yet nobler arts from France,
 Teach kings to fiddle, and make senates dance. Pope.
 2. To trifle; to shift the hands often, and do nothing, like a fellow that plays upon a fiddle.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

Good cooks cannot abide what they justly call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent, and little done. Swift.

FIDDLEFADDLE. n. f. [A cant word.] Trifles.
 He said that their grandfather had a horse shot at Edgehill, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of fiddlefaddle of the same nature. Spektator, N^o. 299.

FIDDLEFADDLE. adj. Trifling; giving trouble, or making a bustle about nothing.
 She was a troublesome fiddlefaddle old woman, and so ceremonious that there was no bearing of her. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

FIDDLER. n. f. [from fiddle.] A musician; one that plays upon the fiddle.
 Let no lawey fiddler presume to intrude,
 Unless he is sent for to vary our bliss. Bm. Johnson.
 Nero put the fiddlers to death, for being more skilful in the trade than he was. Taylor's Rule of Living.

These will appear such chits in story,
 'Twill turn all politics to jests,
 To be repeated like John Dory,
 When fiddlers sing at feasts. Dryden.

When mis delights in her spinnet,
 A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

FIDDESTICK. n. f. [fiddle and stick.] The bow and hair which a fiddler draws over the strings of a fiddle.
 His grizzly beard was long and thick,
 With which he strung his fiddlestick. Hudibras, p. i.

FIDDESTRING. n. f. [fiddle and string.] The string of a fiddle; that which makes the noise.
 A fiddlestring, moistened with water, will sink a note in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lengthened one sixteenth. Arbutnot on Air.

FIDELITY. n. f. [fidelitas, Latin; fidélité, French.]
 1. Honesty; veracity.
 The church, by her public reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; now the principal thing required in a witness is a fidelity. Hooker, b. v. f. 19.

2. Faithful adherence.
 They mistake credulity for fidelity. Clarke.
 To FIDGET. v. n. [A cant word.] To move nimbly and to fidget. Irregularly. It implies in Scotland agitation.

Tim, thou'rt the Funch to stir up trouble in;
 You wriggle, fidget, and make a rout,
 Put all your brother puppets out;
 Run on in a perpetual round,
 To tease, perplex, disturb, confound. Swift.

FIDUCIAL. adj. [fiducia, Latin.] Confident; undoubting.
 Faith is cordial, and such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediential submission to the commands. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

FIDUCIARY. n. f. [fiduciarius, Latin.]
 1. One who holds any thing in trust.
 2. One who depends on faith without works.

The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification; and excludes good works from contributing any thing toward it. Hammond.

 1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouched with doubt.
 That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiduciary assent to whatever the Gospel has revealed. Wake's Preparation for Death.

2. Not to be doubted.
 Eliana can rely no where upon mere love and fiduciary obedience, unless at her own home, where she is exemplarily loyal to herself in a high exact obedience. Hewel's Voc. Forest.

FIEF. n. f. [fiéf, French.] A fee; a manor; a possession held by some tenure of a superior.
 To the next realm the stretch'd her fway,
 For painture near adjoining lay,
 A plenteous province and alluring prey;
 A chamber of dependencies was fram'd,
 And the whole fief, in right of poetry, the claim'd. Dryden.
 As they were honoured by great privileges, for their lands were in the nature of fiefs, for which the possessors were obliged to do personal service at sea. Arbutnot on Coins.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

Good cooks cannot abide what they justly call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent, and little done. Swift.

FIDDLEFADDLE. n. f. [A cant word.] Trifles.
 He said that their grandfather had a horse shot at Edgehill, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of fiddlefaddle of the same nature. Spektator, N^o. 299.

FIDDLEFADDLE. adj. Trifling; giving trouble, or making a bustle about nothing.
 She was a troublesome fiddlefaddle old woman, and so ceremonious that there was no bearing of her. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

FIDDLER. n. f. [from fiddle.] A musician; one that plays upon the fiddle.
 Let no lawey fiddler presume to intrude,
 Unless he is sent for to vary our bliss. Bm. Johnson.
 Nero put the fiddlers to death, for being more skilful in the trade than he was. Taylor's Rule of Living.

These will appear such chits in story,
 'Twill turn all politics to jests,
 To be repeated like John Dory,
 When fiddlers sing at feasts. Dryden.

When mis delights in her spinnet,
 A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

FIDDESTICK. n. f. [fiddle and stick.] The bow and hair which a fiddler draws over the strings of a fiddle.
 His grizzly beard was long and thick,
 With which he strung his fiddlestick. Hudibras, p. i.

FIDDESTRING. n. f. [fiddle and string.] The string of a fiddle; that which makes the noise.
 A fiddlestring, moistened with water, will sink a note in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lengthened one sixteenth. Arbutnot on Air.

FIDELITY. n. f. [fidelitas, Latin; fidélité, French.]
 1. Honesty; veracity.
 The church, by her public reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; now the principal thing required in a witness is a fidelity. Hooker, b. v. f. 19.

2. Faithful adherence.
 They mistake credulity for fidelity. Clarke.
 To FIDGET. v. n. [A cant word.] To move nimbly and to fidget. Irregularly. It implies in Scotland agitation.

Tim, thou'rt the Funch to stir up trouble in;
 You wriggle, fidget, and make a rout,
 Put all your brother puppets out;
 Run on in a perpetual round,
 To tease, perplex, disturb, confound. Swift.

FIDUCIAL. adj. [fiducia, Latin.] Confident; undoubting.
 Faith is cordial, and such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediential submission to the commands. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

FIDUCIARY. n. f. [fiduciarius, Latin.]
 1. One who holds any thing in trust.
 2. One who depends on faith without works.

The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification; and excludes good works from contributing any thing toward it. Hammond.

FIDUCIARY. adj.
 1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouched with doubt.
 That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiduciary assent to whatever the Gospel has revealed. Wake's Preparation for Death.

2. Not to be doubted.

FIE

- See! from the brake the whirring pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings:
Short is his joy; he feels the fiery wound,
Flutters in blood, and panting beats the ground. Pope.

And vengeful slaughter, fiere for human blood. Pope.
Tyrants fiere, that unrelenting die
With that the god, whose earthquakes rock the ground, fiere to Phœcia cross the vast profound. Pope's Odyss.
3. Violent; outrageous Curled be their anger, for it was fiere; and their wrath, for it was cruel. Gen. xlix. 7.
4. Passionate; angry; furious.
This fiere abridgment
Hath to it circumstantial branches, which Distinction should be rich in. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
A man brings his mind to be positive and fiere for positions whose evidence he has never examined. Locke.
5. Strong; forcible.
The ships, though so great, are driven of fiere winds;
yet are they turned about with a very small helm. Ja. iii. 2.
FIERCELY. adv. [from fiere.] Violently; furiously.
Battle join'd, and both sides fiere fought. Shak. H. VI.
The defendants, fiere assailed by their enemies before, and beaten with the great ordnance behind, were grievously distressed. Krolle's History of the Turks.
The air, if very cold, irritates the flame, and maketh it burn more fiere, as fire scorseth in frosty weather, and so furthereth the consumption. Bacon's Natural History.
FIERCENESS. n. f. [from fiere.]
1. Ferocity; savageness.
The same defect of heat which gives a *fiere*ness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of our language.
Swift's Letter to the Lord High Treasurer.
2. Eagerness for blood; fury.
Suddenly there came out of a wood a monstrous lion, with a she-bear not far from him, of little less *fiere*ness. Sidney.
3. Quickness to attack; keenness in anger and resentment.
The Greeks are strong, and full of their strength, Fierce to their skill, and to their *fiere*ness valiant. Shak.
4. Violence; outrageous passion.
His pride and brutal *fiere*ness I abhor;
But from your mean suspicions of me more. Dryd. Aureng.
FIERIFACIAS. [In law.] A judicial writ, that lies at all times within the year and day, for him that has recovered in an action of debt or damages, to the sheriff, to command him to levy the debt, or the damages of his goods, against whom the recovery was had. Cowell.
FIERINESS. n. f. [from fiere.]
1. Hot qualities; heat; acrimony.
The ashes, by their heat, their *fiere*ness, and their dryness, belong to the element of earth. Boyle.
2. Heat of temper; intellectual ardour.
The Italians, notwithstanding their natural *fiere*ness of temper, affect always to appear sober and sedate. Addison.
FIERV. adj. [from fiere.]
1. Consisting of fire.
Scarcely had Phœbus in the gloomy East
Yet harnessed his fiere footed team,
Ne rear'd above the earth his flaming crest,
When the last deadly smoke aloft did steam. Fairy Queen.
I know, thou'dst rather
Follow thine enemy in a fiere gulph
Than flatter him in a bower. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
2. Hot like fire.
Hath thy fiere heart so parcht thy entrails,
That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death? Shak. H. VI.
3. Vehement; ardent; active.
Then fiere expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king. Shakel. Rich. III.
I drew this gallant head of war,
And cull'd these fiere spirits from the world,
To outlook conquest, and to win renown
Ev'n in the jaws of danger and of death. Shakel. K. John.
4. Passionate; outrageous; easily provoked.
You know the fiere quality of the duke;
How unremovable, and fixt he is In his own course. Shakespeare's King Lear.
5. Unrestrained; fierce.
Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,
Mounted upon a hot and fiere steed,
Which his fiere rider seem'd to know,
With slow but stately pace kept on his course. Shak. R. II.
Through Elis and the Grecian towns he flew;
Th' audacious wretch four fiere couriers drew. Dryden.
6. Heated by fire.
The sword which is made fiere doth not only cut, by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker, b. v. 54.

FIG

- See! from the brake the whirring pheasant springs,
And mounts exulting on triumphant wings:
Short is his joy; he feels the fiery wound,
Flutters in blood, and panting beats the ground. Pope.
FIFE. n. f. [ffire, French.] A pipe blown to the drum; military wind-musick.
Farewell the plumed troops, and the big war
That make ambition virtue! oh farewell!
Farewell the neighing feed and the shrill trump,
The spirit-stirring drum, th' ear-piercing fife. Shak. Othello.
Thus the gay victim, with fresh garlands crown'd,
Pleas'd with the sacred fife's enlivening sound,
Through gazing crowds in solemn state proceeds. Phillips.
FIFTEEN. adj. [fyfteen, Saxon.] Five and ten.
I have dream'd and slept above some fifteen years and more. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
FIFTEENTH. adj. [pyfcoða, Sax.] The ordinal of fifteen;
the fifth after the tenth.
A fifteenth part of silver incorporate with gold, will not be recovered by any water of separation, except you put a greater quantity of silver to draw up the less. Bacon's Natural History.
London sends but four burgesses to parliament, although it bear the fifteenth part of the charge of the whole nation in all publick taxes and levies. Grant's Bills of Mortality.
FIFTH. adj. [pyta, Saxon.]
1. The ordinal of five; the next to the fourth.
With smiling aspect you serenely move,
In your fifth orb, and rule the realm of love. Dryden.
Just as I wish'd, the lots were cast on four,
Myself the fifth. Pope's Odyss., b. ix.
2. All the ordinals are taken elliptically for the part which they express: a fifth, a fifth part; a third, a third part.
The publick shall have lost four fifths of its annual income for ever. Swift.
FIFTHLY. adv. [from fifth.] In the fifth place.
Fifthly, living creatures have a more exact figure than plants. Bacon's Natural History, No. 607.
FIFTIETH. adj. [pyfcoða, Saxon.] The ordinal of fifty.
If this medium be rarer within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundred part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the fiftieth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop any where. Newton's Opt.
FIFTY. adj. [pyfrix, Saxon.] Five tens.
A wither'd hermit, five score Winters worn,
Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shakespeare.
Judas ordained captains over thousands, hundreds, fifties, and tens. 1 Macc. iii. 55.
The breadth of the ark shall be fifty cubits. Gen. vi. 15.

ter, of which there are reckoned up above fifty several significations. Locke.
FIG. n. f. [figus, Latin; figo, Spanish; figue, French.]
1. A tree that bears figs.
The characters are: the flowers, which are always inclosed in the middle of the fruit, consist of the leaf, and are male and female in the same fruit: the male flowers are situated towards the crown of the fruit; and the female, growing near the stalk, are succeeded by small hard seeds: the entire fruit is, for the most part, turbinate and globular, or of an oval shape, is fleshy, and of a sweet taste. Miller.
Full on its crown a fig's green branches rise,
And shoot a leafy forest to the skies. Pope's Odyss., b. xii.
Or lead me through the maze,
Embowering endless of the Indian fig. Thomson's Summer.
2. A luscious soft fruit; the fruit of the figtree.
It maketh figs better, if a figtree, when it beginneth to put forth leaves, have his top cut off. Bacon's Nat. History.
Figs are great subduers of acrimony. Arbutnot on Diet.
To FIG. v. a. [See FIGO.]

Away to the low the goes, and figs her in the crown with another story. L'Estrange.
FIGAPPLE. n. f. A fruit.
A figapple hath no core or kernel, in these resembling a fig, and differing from other apples. Martinet's Husbandry.
FIGMARIOLA. n. f. A plant. It is succulent, and has the appearance of houseleek: the leaves grow opposite by pairs. Mill.
To FIGHT. v. n. preter. fought; part. pass. fought. [peohcan,
Saxon.]
1. To contend in battle; to war; to make war; to battle; to contend in arms. It is used both of armies and single combatants.
King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shak. Hen. VI.
Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds
In ranks and squadrons, and right form of war. Shakel.
The common question is, if we must now surrender Spain, what

- what have we been fighing for all this while? The answer is ready: we have been fighing for the ruin of the publick interest, and the advancement of a private. Swift.
For her confederate nations fight, and kings were slain,
Troy was o'erthrown, and a whole empire fell. Phillips.
2. To combat; to duel; to contend in single fight.
One shall undertake to fight against another. 2 Esdr. xiii.
The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
The young ones in her nest, against the owl. Shakel. Macb.
3. To act as a soldier in any case.
Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave duke came early to his grave. Shak. K. John.

Himself alone, an equal match he boasts,
To fight the Phrygian and the Ausonian hosts. Dryd. Æn.
FIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Battle.
2. Combat; duel.
Herilus in single fight I flew,
Whom with three lives Perona did endure;
And thrice I sent him to the Stygian shore,
Till the last ebbing soul return'd no more. Dryden's Æn.
3. Something to screen the combatants in ships.
FIGHTER. n. f. [from fight.] Warrior; duellist.
I will return again into the house, and desire some conduct of the lady: I am no fighter. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
O, 'tis the coldest youth upon a charge,
The most deliberate fighter! Dryden's All for Love.
FIGHTING. participle adj. [from fight.]
1. Qualifier for war; fit for battle.
An host of fighting men went out to war by bands. 2 Chron.
2. Occupied by war; being the scene of war.
In fighting fields, as far the spear I throw
As flies the arrow from the well-drawn bow. Pope's Odyss.
FIGMENT. n. f. [figmentum, Latin.] An invention; a fiction; the idea feigned.
Upon the like grounds was raised the figment of Briareus, who, dwelling in a city call'd Hecatonchiria, the fancies of those times assigned him an hundred hands. Brown's Vulg. Err.
The most frightful passages, probably so strange as to be hardly credible; it carried rather an appearance of figment and invention, in those that handed down the memory of it, than of truth and reality. Woodward's Natural History.
FIGPECKER. n. f. [fig and peck.] A bird.
FIGULATE. adj. [from figulus, Latin.] Made of potters clay.
FIGURABLE. adj. [from figura, Latin.] Capable of being brought to certain form, and retained in it. Thus lead is figurable, but not water.
The differences of impenetrable and impenetrable, figurable and not figurable, scissible and not scissible, are plebeian notions. Bacon's Natural History.
FIGURABILITY. n. f. [from figurable.] The quality of being capable of a certain and stable form.
FIGURAL. adj. [from figura.]
1. Represented by delineation.
Incongruities have been committed by geographers in the figural resemblances of several regions. Brown's Vulg. Err.
2. FIGURAL Numbers. Such numbers as do or may represent some geometrical figure, in relation to which they are always considered, and are either lineary, superficial, or solid. Harris.
FIGURATE. adj. [figuratus, Latin.]
1. Of a certain and determinate form.
Plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not; for look how far the spirit is able to spread and continue itself, so far goeth the shape or figure, and then is determined. Bacon.
2. Resembling any thing of a determinate form: as, figurate stones retaining the forms of shells in which they were formed by the deluge.
3. FIGURATE Counterpoint. [In musick.] That wherein there is a mixture of discords along with the concords. Harris.
5. FIGURATE Descant. [In musick.] That wherein discords are concerned, as well, though not so much, as concords; and may well be termed the ornament or rhetorical part of musick, in regard that in this are introduced all the varieties of points, figures, syncopes, diversities of measures, and whatever else is capable of adorning the composition. Harris.
FIGURATION. n. f. [figuratus, Latin.]
1. Determination to a certain form.
Neither doth the wind, as far as it carrieth a voice, with motion thereof confound any of the delicate and articulate figurations of the air in variety of words. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. The act of giving a certain form.

FIG

- If motion be in a certain order, there followeth vivification and figuration in living creatures perfect. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
FIGURATIVE. adj. [figurativus, Fr. from figura, Latin.]
1. Representing something else; typical; representative.
This, they will say, was figurative, and served by God's appointment but for a time, to shadow out the true everlasting glory of a more divine sanctity; where into Christ being long since entered, it seemeth that all these curious exornations should rather cease. Hooker, b. v. f. 15.
2. Changed by rhetorical figures from the primitive meaning;
not literal.
How often have we been railed at for understanding words in a figurative sense, which cannot be literally understood without overthrowing the plainest evidence of sense and reason. Sillingsfleet's Def. of Diss. on Rom. Idol.
This is a figurative expression, where the words are used in a different sense from what they signify in their first ordinary intention. Rogers's Sermon 14.
3. Full of figures; full of rhetorical exornations; full of changes from the original sense.
Sublime subjects ought to be adorned with the sublimest and with the most figurative expressions. Dryden's Juvenal, Pref.
FIGURATIVELY. adv. [from figurative.] By a figure; in a sense different from that which words originally imply; not literally.
The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself, in the first person, what belongs to others. Hammond.
The words are different, but the sense is still the same;
for therein are figuratively intended Uzziah and Ezechias. Brown.
Satyr is a kind of poetry in which human vices are represented, partly dramatically, partly simply; but, for the most part, figuratively and occultly. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.
1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.
Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single musk-roses, single pinks and gilliflowers, &c. which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borage, buglafs, &c. which have four leaves. Bacon's Natural History.
Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases. Boyle.
Figures are properly modifications of bodies; for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be: whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued. Locke.
2. Shape; form; semblance.
He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion. Shakespeare.
3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean or grand.
The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
E'er I, forsaking gratitude and truth,
Forget the figure of that godlike youth. Dryden's Virgil.
I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses. Addison's Spectator.
A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either. Clarissa.
4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.
While fortune favour'd, while his arms support
I made some figure there; the counsels of the court, Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryden's Æn.
The speech, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison's Spectator.
Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow. Addison's Guardian.
Whether or no they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness. Addison.
Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison's Freeholder.
5. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.
The several statues, which seem'd at a distance to be made of the whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow. Addison's Freeholder.
6. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.
In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the fineness of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
My favourite books and pictures sell;
Kindly throw in a little figure,
And set the price upon the bigger. Prior.
7. Arrangement; disposition; modification.
The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question. Watts's Logic.
8. A character denoting a number.
Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, hands, poets cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number.
His love to Anthony. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop. tra.
He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great

great task; but that is ever good for the publick: but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age.

As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real fums, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves. South's Sermon.

The horoscope; the diagram of the aspects of the astrological houses.

We do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling: the works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and dawning beyond our element. Shakespeare.

He set a figure to discover

If you were fled to Rye or Dover. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 1.

Figure flingers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no foresight in what concerns themselves. L'Estrange, Fable 94.

10. [In theology.] Type representative. Romans.

11. [In rhetoric.] Any mode of speaking in which words are deformed from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptance, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are generally confounded by the exactest writers.

Silken terms precise,
Three pill'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these Summer flies. Shakespeare.

Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.
Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow, must be understood only praying to pray. Stillingsfleet.

They have been taught rhetoric, but yet never taught to express themselves in the language they are always to use; as if the names of the figures that embellished the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. Lacke.

12. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.

To FIGURE. v. a. [figura, Latin.]

1. To form into any determinate shape.

Trees and herbs, in the growing forth of their boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order. Bacon.

Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold. Dryd. Virgil.

2. To show by a corporeal resemblance: as in picture or statuary.

Arachne figur'd how Jove did abuse
Europa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the sea did bear; so lively seen,
That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween. Spenser.

Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,
O'er figur'd worlds now travels with his eye. Pope.

3. To cover or adorn with figures.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,
My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shakesf. Richard II.

4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.

But this effusion of such manly drops,
Startle mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shakesf. K. John.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which those heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end. Hooker, b. v.

There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shakesf. Hen. IV.

Marriage rings are not of this stuff:
Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams. Addison on ancient Medals.

6. To image in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood. Temple.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear
No thought can figure, and no tongue declare. Prior.

7. To prefigure; to foreshow.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun,
In this the heaven figures some event. Shakesf. Henry VI.

8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to. Lacke.

Quacks, figure-fingers, pettifoggers, and republican plotters cannot well live without it. Collier of Confidence.

FIL

FIL'GORT. n. f. [fig and wort.] A plant.

It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of one leaf, gaping at both sides, and generally globular, cut as it were into two lips, under the upper one of which are two small leaves. Milt.

FILA'CROUS. adj. [from filum, Lat.] Consisting of threads; composed of threads.

They make cables of the bark of lime-trees: it is the stalk that maketh the filaceous matter commonly, and sometimes the down that groweth above. Bacon's Natural History.

FILACER. n. f. [filaxarius, low Lat. filum.] An officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixed. Harris.

FILAMENT. n. f. [filament, Fr. filamenta, Latin.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.

The effluvium passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirreth not the bodies interposed. Bacon.

The lungs of consumptives have been confuted, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments. Harvey on Consumptions.

The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray
On the next threads and filaments does bear,
Which form the springy texture of the air
And those still strike the next, 'till to the light
The quick vibration propagates the light. Blackm. Creation.

The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such combustible. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FILBERT. n. f. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beards or hanks, as corrupted from full beard, or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filbert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.

In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, barbaries, filberts, muskmelons, monkhoods of all colours. Bacon, Essay 47.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!
On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?
Yet in a filbert I have often known Maggots survive, when all the kernel's gone. Dorset.

There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former: the best are those of a thin shell. Mortimer.

To FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pillage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen. Spenser.

The champion robbers by night,
And prowleth and filcheth by daie. Tusser's Husbandry.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which neither enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed. Shakespeare's Othello.

My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Sidney.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith. Milt. P. L.

He grieved, he wept, the fight an image brought
Of his own filial love; a sadly pleading thought. Dryden.

2. Bearing the character of relation of a son.

And thus the filial godhead answering (poke. Milt. P. L.)
Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,
Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;
And when the parent rose decays and dies,
With a resembling face the daughter buds arise. Prior.

FILIAL. adj. [filial-le, French; filius, Latin.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.

My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Sidney.

FIL

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.

Those goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn Upon a tawny front. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

So saying, on he led his radiant files,
Dazzling the moon. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

5. [peol, Saxon; vijle, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.

The rough or coarse-toothed file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the unevenness of your work which the hammer made in the forging: the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made; and the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made. Maxon.

Yet they had a file for the mattocks and for the coulters. Sa. xiii. 21.

The smiths and armourers on paleys ride,
Files in their hands and hammers at their side,
And nails for loosen'd spears, and thongs for shields provide. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

FILECUTTER. n. f. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.

Gad-fish is a tough sort of steel: filecutters use it to make their chisels, with which they cut their files. Maxon.

To FILE. v. a. [from filum, a thread.]

1. To string upon a thread or wire. Whence to file a bile is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.

From the day his first bill was filed he began to collect reports. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

2. [from peolan, Saxon.] To cut with a file.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less. Hooker, b. v. f. 27.

His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, and his eye ambitious. Shakespeare's Love's Labour's Lost.

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a blemish by filig or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth. Ray.

3. [from filan.] To foul; to fully; to pollute. This sense is retained in Scotland.

For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind,
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd. Shakespeare.

His weeds, divinely fashioned,
All fil'd and mang'd. Chapman's Iliads, b. xviii.

To FILE. v. n. [from the noun.] To march in a file, not abreast, but one behind another.

All ran down without order or ceremony, 'till we drew up in good order, and filed off. Tatler, No. 86.

Did all the graver atoms at the cell
Of chance file off to form the pond'rous ball,
And undetermined into order fall? Blackmore's Creation.

FIL'EMOR. n. f. [corrupted from feuille morte, a dead leaf, French.] A brown or yellow-brown colour.

The colours you ought to wish for are blue or filem, turned up with red. Swift's Direct. to the Footman.

FIL'ER. n. f. [from filer.] One who files; one who uses the file in cutting metals.

FILIAL. adj. [filial-le, French; filius, Latin.]

FILIAL. adj. [filial-le, French; filius, Latin.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.

FIL

Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes folds her hairs. Dryd. En.
She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope's Windsor For.
2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.
The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:
These morsels stay'd their stomachs; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillets for the feast. Dryden's Liad.
3. Meat rolled together, and tied round.
Fillet of a fenny snake, Shakespeare's Macbeth.
In the cauldron boil and bake.
The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,
In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,
Appear'd like one continu'd species. Swift.
4. [In architecture.] A little member which appears in the ornaments and mouldings, and is otherwise called listel. Harris.
To FILLET. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To bind with a bandage or fillet.
2. To adorn with an astragal.
He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapters and filleted them. Ex. xxxviii. 28.
To FILLIP. v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered.] To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.
If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle. Shak. Hen. IV.
Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars: then let the mutinous winds Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun. Shak. Coriol.
We see, that if you fillip a lute-string, it sheweth double or treble. Bacon's Natural History, N. 183.
FILLIP. n. f. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.
FILLY. n. f. [from fillos, Welsh; filles, French.]
1. A young horse or mare.
They die else of gelding, or gelders do rage:
Young fillies so likely of bulk and of bone,
Keep such to be breeders, let gelding alone. Tuff. Husband.
A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.
2. A young mare, opposed to a colt or young horse.
I left to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile, Neighing in likeness of a filly foal. Shakespeare.
I am joined in wedlock, for my fins, to one of those fillies who are described in the old poet. Addison's Spectator.
FILM. n. f. [from filma, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.
While the silver needle did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle. Bacon's N. Hist.
Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false-fruit thus promis'd clearer light
Had bred. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii. l. 412.
A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and so kept from grating or offending it. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of light, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Bentley's Sermons.
He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day. Pope's Messiah.
To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.
It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
FILMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.
So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.
They with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions off, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
Dereave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Phillips.
Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glitt'ring textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.
To FILTER. v. a. [from filtrare, low Latin; per filum trahere.]
1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.
2. To strain; to percolate.
Dilute this liquor with fair water, filter it through a paper, and so evaporate it. Grew's Museum.
FILTER. n. f. [from filtrum, Latin.]
1. A twist of thread, of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the vessel, so that the liquor drips from it. See NEW DISPENSATORY.

FIN

2. A strainer; a searce.
That the water, passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Key on the Creation.
FILFTH. n. f. [from filth, Saxon.]
1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.
When we in our viciousness grow hard,
The wife gods seal our eyes;
In our own filth drop our clear judgments. Shakespeare.
Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filth favour but themselves. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon's Natural History.
How perfect then is man? From head to foot Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandys.
Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and sap'ience,
To spare the folks that give him hap'ence. Swift.
2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.
Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson's Sermons.
FILTHILY. adv. [from filthy.] Naftily; foully; grossly.
It stuck filthily in the camel's stomach that bulls, bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange's Fable 78.
FILTHINESS. n. f. [from filthy.]
1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.
Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney, b. ii.
2. Corruption; pollution.
They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Fairy Queen.
They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South's Sermons.
FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]
1. Naft; foul; dirty.
Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
2. Gross; polluted.
As all stories are not proper subjects for an epick poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden's Duress.
To FILTRATE. v. a. [from filtrare.] To strain; to percolate; to filter.
The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
FILTRATION. n. f. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.
We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.
FIMBLE. n. f.
The season of pulling of it is first about Lambas, when good part of it will be ripe; that is, the light Summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp. Martin. Hist.
Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,
In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it, to serve at a need,
The fimble to spin, and the carle for her feed. Tuff. Husband.
FIN. n. f. [from fin, Saxon; vin, Dutch.] The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.
He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fin of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakespeare's Othello.
Their fin consist of a number of gristly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. Moré's Antid. against Atheism.
Thus at half-ebb a rowling sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watry herd, affrighted at the roar,
Reff on their fin awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way. Dryden.
Still at his ear th' industrious fin ples;
But as he ples, each busy arm frinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin. Addison's Metam.
FIN-FOOTED.

FIR

FIR-FOOTED. adj. [from fin and foot.] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.
It is described like *fin*spedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in latirostrous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with *fin*s or oars upon their feet. Brown's Vulg. Err.
FIRABLE. adj. [from fin.] That admits a fine.
This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable. Bac.
He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable. Hayward.
FINAL. adj. [from finis, French; finalis, Latin.]
1. Ultimate; last.
And over them triumphant death his dart
Shook; but delay'd to strike, though oft invoc'd
With vows, as their chief good, and final hope. Milt. P. L.
2. Conclusive; decisive.
There be many examples where sea-fights have been final to the war. Bacon, Essay 30.
Henry spent his reign in establishing himself, and had neither leisure nor opportunity to undertake the final conquest of Ireland. Davies on Ireland.
3. Mortal; destructive.
At last resolv'd to work his final snarl,
He lifted up his hand, but back again did start. Fai. Queen.
4. Respecting the end or motive.
Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final; so that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be excluded from life, observing them. Hosier, b. ii.
By its gravity fire raises the water in pumps, siphons, and other engines; and performs all those feats which former philosophers, through ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to a final, namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuity. Ray.
Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Collier on Thought.
FINALLY. adv. [from final.]
1. Ultimately; lastly; in conclusion.
Sight beav'd
May chance to number thee with those Whom patience finally must crown. Milton's Agonists.
2. Completely; without recovery.
Their houses were many times in danger of ruin; yet was there not any house of noble English in Ireland utterly destroyed, or finally rooted out by the hand of justice, but the house of Desmond only. Davies on Ireland.
Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no mens fins to answer for but their own. South's Sermons.
FINANCE. n. f. [French.] Revenue; income; profit. It is seldom used in the singular.
This sort of finance hath been increased by this new device.
The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain; as be the ecclesiastical and forfeitures. Bacon.
His pretence for making war upon his neighbours was their pyracies, though he practised the same trade when he was frightened in his finances at the siege of Byzantium. Arbuthnot.
FINANCIER. n. f. [French.] One who collects or farms the publick revenue.
FINARY. n. f. [from To fine.] In the iron works, the second forge at the iron mills. Ditt.
FINCH. n. f. [from fin, Saxon.] A small bird of which we have three kinds, the goldfinch, chaffinch, and bulfinch.
To FIND. v. a. [from findan, Saxon; vinde, Dutch.]
1. To obtain by searching or seeking.
Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find. Matt. vii. 7.
Whereas thou hast searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all thy household stuff? Gen. xxxi. 37.
A bird that flies about,
And beats itself against the cage,
Finding at last no passage out,
It sits and sings. Cowley.
2. To obtain something lost.
When he hath found his sheep, he layeth it on his shoulders rejoicing. Luke xv. 5.
In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
I lost found both. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
3. To meet with; to fall upon.
There watchful at the gate they find Suspicion with her eyes behind. Dedley's Miscell.
In woods and forests thou art found. Cowley.
The bad must miss, the good unfought shall find. Pope.
4. To know by experience.
How oft will he
Of thy chang'd faith complain!
And his fortunes find to be
So airy and so vain! Cowley.

FIR

The torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.

A man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chron. ii. 14.
22. The particle out is added often without any other use than that it adds some force or emphasis to the verb.
While the proudly march'd about,
Greater conquests to find out,
She beat out Sofan by the by. Cowley.
It is agreeable to compare the face of a great man with the character, and to try if we can find out in his looks and features either the haughty, cruel, or merciful temper. Addison.
He was afraid of being insulted with Greek; for which reason he desired a friend to find him out a clergyman rather of plain sense than much learning. Addison's Spectator.
FINDER. n. f. [from find.]
1. One that meets or falls upon any thing.
We will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of mad men. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
2. One that picks up any thing lost.
Some lewd squeaking cryer,
Well pleas'd with one lean thread-bare groat for hire,
May like a devil roar through every street,
And gall the finder's conscience, if they meet, Drum.
O yes! if any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer. Crosbaw.
FINDER-OUT. n. f. [from find and out.] A censurer; a caviller.
We are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that fellows our places, stops the mouth of all finders. Shaksp.
FINDY. adj. [from find, Saxon.] Plump; weighty; firm; solid. Thus the proverb,
A cold May and a windy,
Makes the barn fat and findy, means that it stores the barn with plump and firm grain. Jun.

FIN

FINE. adj. [finne, French; fin, Dutch and Erie, perhaps from finis, completed, Latin.]

They taught us, indeed, to cloath, to dwell in houses,
To feast, to sleep on down, to be profuse:
A fine exchange for liberty. Phillips's Briton.

FINE. n. f. [finis, Latin.]

1. A mulct; a pecuniary punishment.
The killing of an Irishman was not punished by our law, as manslaughter, which is felony and capital; but by a fine or pecuniary punishment, called an ericke. Davies on Ireland.
2. Penalty.

Ev'n this ill night your breathing shall expire, Paying the fine of rated treachery. Shakespeare, King John.

3. Forfeit; money paid for any exemption or liberty.
The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him: if the devil have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Beside fines set upon plays, games, balls and feasting, they have many customs which contribute to their simplicity. Addis.

How vain that second life in others breath,
Th' estate which wits inherit after death!
Ease, health, and life for this they must resign,
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine! Pope.

4. [From finis, Latin; fin, enfin, French.] The end; conclusion. It is seldom used but adverbially, in fine.

In fine, whatsoever he was, he was nothing but what it pleased Zelmane, the powers of his spirit depending on her. Sid.

His resolution, in fine, is, that in the church a number of things are strictly observed, whereof no law of scripture maketh mention one way or other. Hooker, b. ii. c. 5.

Still the fine's the crown;
Whate'er the course, the end is the renown. Shakespeare.

Your daughter, ere the fawns as won,
Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter;
In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
Herself most chafly absent. Shak. All's well that ends well.

The blessings of fortune are the lowest: the next are the bodily advantages of strength and health; but the superlative blessings, in fine, are those of the mind. L'Estrange.

In fine, he wears no limbs about him found,
With forces and sicknesses beleagu'd round. Dryden's Juv.

In fine, let there be a perfect relation betwixt the parts and the whole, that they may be entirely of a piece. Dryden.

FIN

To FINE. v. a. [from fine, the adjective.]

1. To refine; to purify.
The refining pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold. Prov.
There is a vein for the silver, and a place for gold, where they fine it. Job xxvii. 1.
2. To embellish; to decorate. Now not in use.
Hugh Capet also, who usurp'd the crown,
To fine his title with some shews of truth,
Convey'd himself as heir to th' lady Lingare. Shakespeare, H. V.
3. To make less coarse.
It fines the grass, but makes it short, though thick. Martin.

What poet ever fine'd for sheriff? or who
By rhymes and verse did ever lord mayor grow? Oldham.

To FINE DRA'W. v. a. [fine and d'aw.] To sow up a rent with so much nicety that it is not perceived.

FINE DRA'WER. n. f. [from fine and d'aw.] One whose business is to sow up rents.

FINEFIN'GERED. adj. [fine and finger.] Nice; artful; exquisite.

The most finefinger'd workman on the ground,
Arachne, by his means was vanquished. Spenser.

FINELY. adv. [from fine.]

1. Beautifully; elegantly; more than justly.
Plutarch says very finely, that a man should not allow himself to hate even his enemies; because, says he, if you indulge this passion on some occasions, it will rise of itself in others. Addison's Spectator, No. 125.

The walls are painted, and represent the labours of Hercules: many of them look very finely, though a great part of the work has been cracked. Addison on Italy.

2. Keenly; sharply; with a thin edge or point.
Get you black lead, sharpened finely, and put it into quills. Peachment on Drawing.

Not coarsely; not meanly; gaily.
He was alone, save that he had two persons of honour, on either hand one, finely attired in white. Bacon's New Atlantis.

4. In small parts; subtly; not grossly.
Saltpetre was but grossly beaten; for it should not be finely powdered. Boyle.

[Ironically.] Wretchedly; in such a manner as to deserve contemptuous notice.
Let laws be made to obey, and not to be obeyed, and you will find that kingdom finely governed in a short time. South.

For him the lovers:
She nam'd not me; that may be Torridmond,
Whom he has thrice in private seen this day:
Then I am finely caught in my own snare. Dryd. Sp. Rygar.

FINENESS. n. f. [from fine.]

1. Elegance; beauty; delicacy.
Every thing was full of a choice fineness, that, if it wanted any thing in majesty, it supplied with increase in pleasure; and if at the first it struck not admiration, it ravished with delight. Sidney.

The softness of her sex, and the fineness of her genius, conspire to give her a very distinguishing character. Prior.

2. Show; splendour; gaiety of appearance.
The fineness of cloaths destroys the ease: it often helps men to pain, but can never rid them of any: the body may languish under the most splendid cover. Decay of Piety.

Subtlety; artfulness; ingenuity.
Those, with the fineness of their souls,
By reason guide his execution. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cressida.

Our works are, indeed, nought else
But the protractive trials of great Jove,
To find perceptive constancy in men;
The fineness of which metal is not found
In fortune's love. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals; as whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height: but when they come to such a fineness as serveth the ordinary use, they try no farther. Bacon's Natural History.

The ancients were careful to coin their money in due weight and fineness, only in times of exigence they have diminished both the weight and fineness. Arbutnot on Coins.

FINERY. n. f. [from fine.] Show; splendour of appearance; gaiety of colours.

Dress up your houses and your images,
And put on all the city's finery,
To consecrate this day a festival. Southern.

Don't chafe your place of study by the finery of the prospects, or the most various scenes of sensible things. Watson.

FINE'SSE.

FIN

FINE'SSE. n. f. [French.] Artifice; stratagem: an unnecessary word which is creeping into the language.

A circumstance not much to be stood upon, in case it were not upon some finess. Hayward.

FINER. n. f. [from fine.] One who purifies metals.
Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer. Prov. xxv. 4.

FINGER. n. f. [finger, Saxon, from fangan, to hold.]

1. The flexible member of the hand by which men catch and hold.

The fingers and thumb in each hand consist of fifteen bones, there being three to each finger: they are a little convex and round towards the back of the hand, but hollow and plain towards the palm, except the last, where the nails are. The order of their dispositions is called first, second, and third phalanx: the first is longer than the second, and the second longer than the third. The upper extremity of the first bone on each finger has a little sinus, which receives the round head of the bones of the metacarpus. The upper extremity of the second and third bones of each finger hath two small sinuses, parted by a small protuberance; and the lower extremity of the first and second bones of each finger has two protuberances, divided by a small sinus: the two protuberances are received into the two sinuses of the upper extremity of the second and third bones; and the small sinus receives the little protuberance of the same end of the same bones. The first bone of the thumb is like the bones of the metacarpus, and it is joined to the wrist and second of the thumb, as they are to the wrist and first of the fingers. The second bone of the thumb is like the first bones of the fingers, and it is joined to the first and third, as they are to the bones of the metacarpus and second of the fingers. The fingers are moved sideways only upon their first joint. Besides these there are some small bones, called ossa sesamoides, because they resemble sesamum grains: they are reckoned about twelve in each hand: they are placed at the joint of the fingers, under the tendons of the flexors, to which they serve as pulleys. Quincy.

You seem to understand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying Upon her skinny lips. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Diogenes, who is never said,
For aught that ever I could read,
To whine, put finger i' th' eye and sob,
Because h' had ne'er another tub. Hudibras.

The hand is divided into four fingers bending forward, and one opposite to them bending backwards, and of greater strength than any of them singly, which we call the thumb, to join with them severally or united; whereby it is fitted to lay hold of objects of any size or quantity. Ray on the Creat.

A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes of the world, and making every one found a particular note. Kil against Burnet.

Poor Peg, fowled, spun, and knit for a livelihood, 'till her finger ends were sore. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

2. A small measure of extension.
Go now, go trust the wind's uncertain breath,
Remov'd four fingers from approaching death;
Or seven at most, when thickest is the board. Dryd. Juv.

One of these bows with a little arrow did pierce through a piece of steel three fingers thick. Watson's Math. Mag.

3. The hand; the instrument of work; manufacture; art.
Fool, that forgets her stubborn look
This softness from thy finger took. Waller.

To FIN'GER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To touch lightly; to toy with.
Go, get you gone, and let the papers lie;
You would be fingering them to anger me. Shakespeare.

One that is covetous is not so highly pleased with the meer sight and fingering of money, as with the thoughts of his being considered as a wealthy man. Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

2. To touch unseasonably or thievelily.
His ambition would needs be fingering the scepter, and hoisting him into his father's throne. South's Sermons.

To touch an instrument of music.
She hath broke the lute;
I did but tell her the mistook her frets,
And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering. Shakespeare.

4. To perform any work exquisitely with the fingers.
Not any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
With this so curious net-work might compare. Spenser.

FINGLEFANGLE. n. f. [from fangle.] A trifle: a burlesque word.

We agree in nothing but to wrangle,
About the slightest finglefangle. Hudibras, p. iii. can. 3.

FINICAL. adj. [from fine.] Nice; foppish; pretending to superfluous elegance.

A whorl'd, glist'gazing, superfluous, finical rogue. Shakespeare's King Lear.

I cannot hear a finical fool romancing, how the king took him aside at such a time; what the queen said to him at another. Watson.

FINICALLY. adv. [from finical.] Foppishly.

FIN

FINICALNESS. n. f. [from finical.] Superfluous nicety; foppishness.

To FINISH. v. a. [finir, French; finis, Latin.]

1. To bring to the end purposed; to complete.
For which of you, intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it? Luke xiv. 28.

As he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grace. 2 Cor. viii. 6.

A poet uses episodes; but episodes, taken separately, finish nothing. Notes on the Odyssey.

2. To perfect; to polish to the excellency intended.
Though here you all perfection should not find,
Yet is it all th' Eternal Will design'd;
It is a finish'd work, and perfect in his kind. Blackmore.

I would make what bears your name as finished as my last work ought to be; that is, more finished than the rest. Pope.

3. To end; to put an end to.

FINISHER. n. f. [from finish.]

1. Performer; accomplisher.
He that of greatest works is finisher,
Oft does them by the weakest minister. Shakespeare.

One that puts an end; ender.
This was the plain condition of those times; the whole world against Athanasius, and Athanasius against it: half an hundred of years spent in doubtful trials which of the two, in the end, would prevail; the side which had all, or else that part which had no friend but God and death, the one a defender of his innocency, the other a finisher of all his troubles. Hooker, b. v. c. 42.

3. One that completes or perfects.
The author and finisher of our faith. Hebrews.
O prophet of glad tidings! finisher
Of utmost hope! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

FINITE. adj. [finitus, Latin.] Limited; bounded; terminated.

Servius conceives no more thereby than a finite number for indefinite. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 12.

Finite of any magnitude holds not any proportion to infinity. Locke.

That supposed infinite duration will, by the very supposition, be limited at two extremes, though never so remote asunder, and consequently must needs be finite. Bentley's Serm.

FINITELESS. adj. [from finite.] Without bounds; unlimited.
It is ridiculous unto reason, and finiteless as their desires. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FINITELY. adv. [from finite.] Within certain limits; to a certain degree.

They are creatures still, and that sets them at an infinite distance from God; whereas all their excellencies can make them but finitely distant from us. Stillingfleet.

FINITENESS. n. f. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

I ought now to unbay the current of my passion, and love without other boundary than what is set by the finiteness of my natural powers. Norris.

FINITUDE. n. f. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

Finitude, applied to natural or created things, imports the proportions of the several degrees of affections, or properties of these things to one another; infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of affections, or properties. Cleyn.

FINLESS. adj. [from fin.] Without fins.

He angers me
With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
And of a dragon and a finless fish. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

FINLIKE. adj. [fin and like.] Formed in imitation of fins.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untought Indian, on the stream did glide;
Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or finlike oars did spread from either side. Dryd. Ann. Mir.

FINNED. adj. [from fin.] Having broad edges spread out on either side.

They plow up the turf with a broad finned plough. Martin.

FINNY. adj. [from fin.] Furnished with fins; formed for the element of water.

High o'er the main in wat'ry pomp he rides,
His azure car and finny couriers guides;
Proteus his name. Dryden's Virg. Georg. b. iv.

New herds of beasts he sends the plains to share;
New colonies of birds to people air;
And to their oozy beds the finny fish repair. Dryd. Ovid.

While black with storms the finny fish repair,
And from the fisher's art defends her finny shoals. Blackmore.

With hairy springes we the birds betray;
Slight lures of hair surprize the finny prey. Pope.

FINTOED. adj. [fin and toe.] Palmipedous; having a membrane between the toes.

Such creatures as are whole footed, or fintoed, viz. some birds and quadrupeds, are naturally directed to go into the water and swim there. Ray on the Creation.

FINOCHRO.

FIR

FIRNOCHIO. n. f. See FENNEL, of which plant it is a species.

FIRPLE. n. f. [from fibula, Latin.] A stopper.
You must know, that in recorders, which go with a gentle breath, the concave of the pipe, were it not for the fibula that straiteneth the air, much more than the simple concave, would yield no found.

FIR. n. f. [fir, Welsh; fir, Saxon; fir, Danish.] The tree of which deal-boards are made.

It is ever green; the leaves are single, and for the most part produced on every side of the branches: the male flowers, or catkins, are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are propagated on cones, which are squamose. See PINE-TREE.

He covered the floor of the house with planks of fir. 1 Kings.
The 'spiring fir and flatly box adorn.

FIRE. n. f. [fy, Saxon; feur, German.]

1. The igneous element.
2. Any thing burning.

A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench. Shakesp. H. VI.

Where two raging fires meet together,
They do consume the thing that feeds their fury. Shakesp.

So contraries on Etna's top conspire;
Here hoary frosts, and by them breaks out fire. Cowley.

3. A conflagration of towns or countries.
There is another liberality to the citizens, who had suffered damage by a great fire. Arbutnot on Coins.

Though safe thou think'st thy treasure lies,
Conceal'd in chests from human eyes,
A fire may come, and it may be Bury'd, my friend, as far from thee. Granville.

4. Flame; light; lustre.
Stars, hide your fires!
Let not night see my black and deep desires! Shakesp. Macb.

5. Torture by burning.
Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire,
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire? Prior.

6. The punishment of the damned.
Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? Isa. xxxiii.

7. Any thing provoking; any thing that inflames the passions.
What fire is in my ears? Can this be true?
Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn so much? Shakesp.

8. Ardour of temper; violence of passion.

9. Liveliness of imagination; vigour of fancy; intellectual activity; force of expression; spirit of sentiment.
Nor can the frow that age does shed
Upon thy rev'rend head,
Quench or allay the noble fire within, Cowley.

But all that youth can be thou art.
They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words, and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is good oratory and poetry to them. Felton on the Classics.

10. The passion of love.
Love various hearts does variously inspire,
It fits in gentle bosoms gentle fire,
Like that of incense on the altar laid;
But raging flames tempestuous souls invade;
A fire which every windy passion blows,
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

The fire of love in youthful blood,
Like what is kindled in brush-wood,
But for a moment burns. Shadwell.

11. Eruptions or impetuousness: as, St. Anthony's fire.
The god of love retires;
Dim are his torches, and extinct his fires.
New charms shall still increase desire,
And time's swift wing shall fan the fire. Moore's Fables.

12. To set fire on, or set on fire. To kindle; to inflame.
Hermosilla courageously set upon the horsemen, and set fire also upon the stables where the Turks' horses stood. Kneller.

He that set a fire on a plane-tree to spite his neighbour, and the plane-tree set on his neighbour's house, is bound to pay all the loss, because it did all rise from his own ill intention. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

FIREARMS. n. f. [fire and arms.] Arms which owe their efficacy to fire; guns.
Nor had they ammunition to supply their few firearms: horses they had, and officers they had, which made all their shew. Clarendon, b. ii.

Before the use of firearms there was infinitely more scope for personal valour than in the modern battles. Pope.

FIREBALL. n. f. [fire and ball.] Grenado; ball filled with combustibles, and bursting where it is thrown.

Others burn'd Moulfel, and the rest march'd as a guard for defence of these firers. Corwall's Survey of Cornwall.

FIRESEDE. n. f. [fire and side.] The hearth; the chimney; the focus.

My judgment is, that they ought all to be despoiled, and ought to serve but for Winter talk by the fireside. Bacon.

By his fireside he starts the hare,
And turns her in his wicker chair:
His feet, however lame, you find,
Have got the better of his mind. Prior.

What art thou asking of them, after all? Only to sit quietly at thy own fireside. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

FIRESTICK. n. f. [fire and stick.] A lighted stick or brand. Children, when they play with firesticks, move and while them round so fast, that the motion will cozen their eyes, and represent an intire circle of fire to them. Digby on Ballois.

FIREWORK. n. f. [fire and work.] Shows of fire; pyrotechnical performances.

The king would have me present the princes with some delightful ottentation, or pageants, or antics, or firework. Shak.

We represent also ordnance, and new mixtures of gunpowder, wildfires burning in water and unquenchable; and also fireworks of all variety. Bacon's New Atlantis.

The ancients were imperfect in the doctrine of meteors, by their ignorance of gunpowder and fireworks. Breun.

In fireworks give him leave to vent his spite;
Those are the only serpents he can write. Dryden.

Our companion proposed a subject for a firework, which he thought would be very amusing. Addison's Guardian.

Their fireworks are made up in paper. Tatler, N^o. 88.

TO FIRE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To set on fire; to kindle.
They spoiled many parts of the city, and fired the houses of those whom they esteemed not to be their friends; but the rage of the fire was at first hindered, and then appeased by the fall of a sudden shower of rain. Hayward.

The breathless body, thus bewail'd, they lay,
And fire the pile. Dryden.

A second Paris, diff'ring but in name,
Shall fire his country with a second flame. Dryden's Æn.

2. To inflame the passions; to animate.
Yet, if desire of fame, and thirst of pow'r,
A beauteous prince, with a crown in dow'r,
So fire your mind, in arms assert your right. Dryden.

3. To drive by fire.
He that parts us, shall bring a brand from heav'n
And fire us hence. Shakespeare's King Lear.

TO FIRE. v. n.
1. To take fire; to be kindled.
2. To be inflamed with passion.
3. To discharge any firearms.

FIREBRAND. n. f. [fire and brand.]
1. A piece of wood kindled.
I have cal'd my father-in-law of a firebrand, to set my own house in a flame. L'Estrange.

2. An incendiary; one who inflames factions; one who causes mischief.
Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilium stand;
Our firebrand brother, Paris, burns us all. Shakespeare.

He sent Surrey with a competent power against the rebels, who fought with the principal band of them, and defeated them, and took alive John Chamber, their firebrand. Bacon.

FIRECROSS. n. f. [fire and cross.] A token in Scotland for the nation to take arms; the ends thereof burnt black, and in some parts smeared with blood. It is carried like lightning from one place to another. Upon refusal to send it forward, or to rise, the last person who has it shoots the other dead.

He sent his heralds through all parts of the realm, and commanded the firecross to be carried; namely, two firebrands set in fashion of a cross, and pitched upon the point of a spear. Haywood.

FIRELOCK. n. f. [fire and lock.] A soldier's gun; a gun discharged by striking steel with flint.

Prime all your firelocks, fallen well the stake. Gay.

FIREMAN. n. f. [fire and man.]
1. One who is employed to extinguish burning houses.
The fireman treads beneath his crooked arms;
A leathern casque his vent'rous head defends,
Boldly he climbs where thickest smoke ascends. Gay.

2. A man of violent passions.
I had last night the fate to drink a bottle with two of these firemen. Tatler, N^o. 61.

FIREPAN. n. f. [fire and pan.]

Our men bravely quitted themselves of the fireships, by cutting the piftal tackle. Wilmot's Surgery.

FIRESHOVEL. n. f. [fire and shovel.] The instrument with which the hot coals are thrown up in kitchens.
Nim and Bardolph are sworn brothers in filching; and in Calais they stole a fireshovel. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Culinary utensils and irons often feel the force of fire; as tongs, firespades, prongs, and irons. Brown's Vign. Errors.

The neighbours are coming out with forks and fireshovels, and spits, and other domestic weapons. Dryden's Span. Fryar.

FIRESTONE. n. f. [fire and stone.]
The firestone, or pyrites, is a compound metallick fossil, composed of vitriol, sulphur, and an unmetallick earth, but in very different proportions in the several masses. The most common sort, which is used in medicine, is a greenish shapeless kind found in our clay-pits, out of which the green vitriol or copperas is procured. It has its name of pyrites, or firestone, from its giving fire on being struck against a steel much more freely than a flint will do; and all the sparks burn a longer time, and grow larger as they fall, the inflammable matter struck from off the stone burning itself out before the spark becomes extinguished. Hill's Mat. Med.

Firestone is a kind of stone called also Rygate stone, from the place whence it is chiefly brought, being very good for firehearts, ovens, and foves. Builder's Dict.

Firestones, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FIREWOOD. n. f. [fire and wood.] Wood to burn; fewel.

FIRING. n. f. [from fire.] Fewel.
They burn the cakes, firing being there scarce. Mortimer.

TO FIRE. v. a. [from ferio, Latin.] To whip; to beat; to correct; to chastise.
Besides, it is not only foppish,
But vile, idolatrous and popish,
For one man out of his own skin
To strike and whip another's sin. Hudibras, p. ii. can. 2.

FIRKIN. n. f. [from peopon, Saxon, the fourth part of a vessel.]
1. A vessel containing nine gallons.
Strutt's servants get such a haunt about that shop, that it will cost us many a firkin of strong beer to bring them back again. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

2. A small vessel.
You heard of that wonder of the lightning and thunder,
Which made the lye so much the louder;
Now lift to another, that miracle's brother,
Which was done with a firkin of powder. Denham.

FIRM. adj. [firmus, Latin.]
1. Strong; not easily pierced or shaken; hard, opposed to soft.
The flakes of his flesh are joined together: they are firm in themselves, and they cannot be moved. Job xli. 23.

Love's artillery then checks
The breastworks of the firmest sex. Cleveland.

There is nothing to be left void in a firm building; even the cavities ought to be filled with rubbish. Dryden.

That body, whose parts are most firm in themselves, and are by their peculiar shapes capable of the greatest contacts, is the most firm; and that which has parts very small, and capable of the least contact, will be most soft. Woodward.

2. Constant; steady; resolute; fixed; unshaken.
We hold firm to the works of God, and to the sense which is God's lamp. Bacon's Natural History.

He straight obeys;
And firm believes. Mt. Paradise Lost.

The great encouragement is the assurance of a future reward, the firm persuasion whereof is enough to raise us above any thing in this world. Tillotson, Sermon 6.

The man that's resolute and just,
Firm to his principles and trust,

He on his card and compass firm his eye,
The masters of his long experiment. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

FIRMAMENT. n. f. [firmamentum, Latin.] The sky; the heavens.
Even to the heavens their shouting fill
Doth reach, and all the firmament doth fill. Spenser.

I am constant as the northern star,
Of whose true, fixt, and resting quality,
There is no fellow in the firmament. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæsar.

The Almighty, whose hieroglyphical characters are the unnumbered stars, sun and moon, written on these large volumes of the firmament. Raleigh's History of the World.

The firmament expanse of liquid, pure,
Transparent, elemental air, diffus'd
In circuit to the uttermost convex
Of this great round. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

The flocks climb up the first ascent with pain;
And when the middle firmament they gain,
If downward from the heavens my head I bow,
And see the earth and ocean hang below,
Ev'n I am seiz'd with horror. Addison's Ovid's Metamorph.

What an immensurable space is the firmament, wherein a great number of stars, lesser and lesser, and consequently farther and farther off, are seen with our naked eye, and many more discovered with our glasses! Derham's Astro-Theology.

FIRMAMENTAL. adj. [from firmament.] Celestial; of the upper regions.
An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

My invention and judgment are perpetually at fisticuffs, till they have quite disabled each other. Swift.

FISTULA. n. f. [Latin; fishula, French.]

1. A sinuous ulcer callous within; any sinuous ulcer.

That fishula which is recent is the easiest of cure: those of a long continuance are accompanied with ulcerations of the gland and caries in the bone. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. FISTULA Lachrymalis. A disorder of the canals leading from the eye to the nose, which obstructs the natural progress of the tears, and makes them trickle down the cheeks; but this is only the first and mildest stage of the disease: in the next there is matter discharged with the tears from the puncta lachrymalia, and sometimes from an orifice broke through the skin between the nose and angle of the eye. The last and worst degree of it is when the matter of the eye, by its long continuance, has not only corroded the neighbouring soft parts, but also affected the subjacent bone. Sharp's Surgery.

FISTULAR. adj. [from fishula.] Hollow like a pipe.

FISTULOUS. adj. [from fishula; fishuleux, French.] Having the nature of a fistula; callous or sinuous like a fistula.

How these sinuous ulcers become fishulous, I have shewn
you. Wifeman's Surgery.

FIT. n. f. [from fight, Skinner, every fit of a disease being a struggle of nature; from fit, in Flemish, frequent, Junius.]

4

FIT

1. A paroxysm or exacerbation of any intermittent disorder.
Small stones and gravel collect and become very large in the kidneys, in which case a fit of the stone in that part is the cure. Sharp's Surgery.

2. Any short return after intermission; interval.

Sometimes 'tis grateful to the rich to try
A short vicissitude, and fit of poverty. Dryden's Horace.

Men that are habitually wicked may now and then, by fits and starts, feel certain motions of repentance. L'Estrange.

By fits my swelling grief appears,

In rising sighs and falling tears. Addison on Italy.

Thus o'er the dying lamp th' unsteady flame
Hangs quivering on a point, leaps off by fits,
And falls again as loth to quit its hold. Addison's Cato.

Religion is not the business of some fits only and intervals of our life, to be taken up at certain days and hours, and laid aside for the rest of our time; but a system of precepts to be regarded in all our conduct. Rogers's Sermons.

All fits of pleasure we balanced by an equal degree of pain or languor: 'tis like spending this year part of the next year's revenue. Swift.

3. Any violent affection of mind or body.

The life did flit away out of her nest,
And all his senses were with deadly fit oppress'd. Fairy Queen.

An ambitious man subjects himself to others, and puts it in the power of every malicious tongue to throw him into a fit of melancholy. Addison's Spectator.

4. Disorder; distemperature.

For your husband,

He's noble, wife, judicious, and best knows
The fit of th' season. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

5. It is used, without an epithet of discrimination, for the hysterial disorders of women, and the convulsions of children;
and by the vulgar for the epilepsy.

Mrs. Bull was so much enraged, that she fell downright into a fit. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

FIT. adj. [written, Flemish, Junius.]

1. Qualified; proper: with for before the noun, and to before the verb.

Mighty men of valour, fit to go out for war and battle. Chron. vii. 11.

He lends him vain Goliath's sacred sword,
The fit help just fortune could afford. Cowley's Davidis.

This fury fit for her intent she chose,
One who delights in wars and human woes. Dryden's Æn.

It is a wrong use of my understanding to make it the rule and measure of another man's; a use which it is neither fit for, nor capable of. Locke.

2. Convenient; meet; proper; right.

Since we have laid it were good not to use men of ambitious natures, except it be upon necessity, it is fit we speak in what cases they are so. Bacon's Essay 17.

See how thou could'st judge of fit and meet. Milt. P. L.

It is fit for a man to know his own abilities and weaknesses, and not think himself obliged to imitate all that he thinks fit to praise. Boyle.

If our forefathers thought fit to be grave and serious, I hope their posterity may laugh without offence. Addison.

To FIT. v. a. [written, Flemish, Junius.]

1. To accommodate to any thing; to suit one thing to another.

The carpenter marketh it out with a line: he *fit*eth it with planes. Jf. xlii. 13.

Would fate permit

To my desires I might my fortune fit, Troy I would raise. Denham.

2. To accommodate a person with any thing: as, the tailor fits his customer.

A trussmaker *fit*ted the child with a pair of boddices, stiffened on the lame side. Wifeman's Surgery.

3. To be adapted to; to suit any thing.

She shall be our messenger to this pauley knight: trust me
I thought on her; she'll fit it. Shakspeare.

As much of the stone as was contiguous to the marcasite, *fit*ted the marcasite so close as if it had been formerly liquid. Bo.

4. To FIT out. To furnish; to equip; to supply with necessaries or decoration.

A plays, which if you dare but twice fit out,
You'll all be slander'd, and be thought devout. Dryden.

The English fleet could not be paid and manned, and *fit*ted cut, unless we encouraged trade and navigation. Addison's Freeb.

5. To FIT up. To furnish; to make proper for the use or reception of any.

He has *fit*ted up his farm. Pope to Swift.

To FIT. v. n. To be proper; to be fit.

Nor fits it to prolong the heavenly feast,
Timeless, indecent, but retire to rest. 1 ep. 1 Odyssey, b. iii.

FITCH. n. f. [A colloquial corruption of witch.] A small kind of wild pea.

Now is the season

For sowing of fitches, of beans, and of pease. Tusser.

FITCHER.

FIX

Skinner calls him the stinking ferret; but he is much larger, at least as some provinces distinguish them, in which the pole-cat is termed a fitchet, and the stinking ferret a foat.
 'Tis such another ficheu! marry, a perfum'd one:
 What do you mean by this haunting of me? Shakespeare.
 The fichet, the fulmart, and the like creatures, live upon the face and within the bowels of the earth. Walton's Angler.
Fi'tful. adj. [fit and full.] Varied by paroxysms; disorder'd by change of maladies.

 After life's fi'tful fever he sleeps well. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Fi'tly. adv. [from fit.]
 1. Properly; justly; reasonably.

Mutinous parts
 That envied his rectis, even to most fi'tly
 As you malign our senators. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Where a man cannot fi'tly play his own part, if he have not a friend, he may quit the stage. Bacon, Essay 28.
 I cannot fi'tter compare marriage than to a lottery; for, in both, he that ventures may succeed, and may miss; and if he draw a prize, he hath a rich return of his venture: but in both lotteries there lie pretty store of blanks for every prize. Boyle.
 The whole of our duty may be expressed most fi'tly by departing from evil. Tillotson's Sermons.
 An animal, in order to be moveable, must be flexible; and therefore is fi'tly made of separate and small solid parts, replete with proper fluids. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Commodiously; meetly.
 To take a latitude,
 Sun or stars are fi'ttest view'd
 At their brightest; but to conclude
 Of longitudes, what other way have we
 But to mark when, and where the dark eclipses be. Donne.

Fi'tness. n. f. [from fit.]
 1. Propriety; meetness; justness; reasonableness.
 In things the fi'tness whereof is not of itself apparent, nor easy to be made sufficiently manifest unto all, yet the judgment of antiquity, concurring with that which is received, may induce them to think it not unfit. Hesker, b. v. f. 7.
 The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fi'tness
 That we adjourn this court. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Wer't my fi'tness
 To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
 They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
 Thy flesh and bones. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 2. Convenience; commodity; the state of being fit.
 Nor time nor place
 Did then cohere, and yet you would make both:
 They've made themselves, and that their fi'tness now
 Does unmake you. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Fi'tment. n. f. [from fit.] Something adapted to a particular purpose.
 Poor befecming: 'twas a fi'tment for
 The purpose I then follow'd. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Fi'tter. n. f. [from fit.]
 1. The person or thing that confers fitness for any thing.
 Sowing the sandy gravelly land in Devonshire and Cornwall with French furze-leaf, they reckon a great improver of their land, and a fi'tter of it for corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 2. [from fitta, Italian; fitzen, German.] A small piece: as, to cut into fi'tters. Skinner.
Fi'tz. n. f. [Norman, from fitz, a son, Fr.] A son. Only used in law and genealogy: as Fitzherbert, the son of Herbert; Fitzthomas, the son of Thomas; Fitzroy, the son of the king. It is commonly used of illegitimate children.

FIVE. adj. [five, Saxon.] Four and one; half of ten.
 And five of them were wife, and five were foolish. Mat.
 No person, no incident, but must be of use to carry on the main design: all things else are like fix fingers to the hand, when nature, which is superfluous in nothing, can do her work with five. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Five herds, five bleating flocks, his pastures fill'd;
 His lands a hundred yoke of oxen till'd. Dryden's Æn.
 Our British youth lose their figure by that time they are five and twenty. Addison's Guardian, N^o. 111.

 To FIX. v. a. [fixer, French; fixus, Latin.]
 1. To make fast, firm, or stable.
 Hell heard the unsufferable noise, hell saw Heav'n ruining from heav'n, and would have fled Affrighted, but that fate had fix'd too deep
 Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound. Milt. P. L.
 2. To settle; to establish invariably.
 Brightest seraph! tell
 In which of all these orbs hath man

FIX

His fix'd seat, or fix'd seat hath none,
 But all these fix'd orbs his choice to dwell! Milt. P. L.
 One loves fix'd laws, and the other arbitrary power. Temple.
 When custom hath fix'd his earring to certain stated periods, his stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour. Locke.
 3. To direct without variation.
 Why are thine eyes fix'd to the fallen earth,
 Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight! Shak. II. VI.
 Thus while the Trojan prince employs his eyes,
Fix'd on the walls with wonder and surprize. Dryden's Æn.

4. To deprive of volatility.
 We pronounce concerning gold, that it is fix'd. Locke.
 5. To pierce; to transfix. A sense purely Latin.
 While from the raging sword he vainly flies,
 A bow of steel shall fix his trembling thighs. Sandys.

6. To withhold from motion.
 To FIX. v. n.
 1. To settle the opinion; to determine the resolution.
 If we would be happy, we must fix upon some foundation that can never deceive us. LeEstrange.
 He made himself their prey,
 T' impose on their belief and Troy betray;
Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent
 To die undaunted, or to circumvent. Dryden's Æn.
 Here hope began to dawn; and resolv'd to try,
 She fix'd on this her utmost remedy,
 Death was behind; but hard it was to die. Dryden.
 In most bodies, not propagated by feed, it is the colour we must fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

2. To rest; to cease to wander.
 Your kindness banishes your fear,
 Resolv'd to fix for ever here. Waller.
 3. To lose volatility, so as to be malleable.
 In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, and put quicksilver, wrapped in a piece of linen, in that hole, and the quicksilver will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon's Natural History.
FIXATION. n. f. [French.]

1. Stability; firmness; steadiness.
 Your fixation in matters of religion will not be more necessary for your soul's than your kingdom's peace. King Charles.
 2. Residence in a certain place.
 To light, created in the first day, God gave no proper place or fixation. Raleigh's History of the World.
 3. Confinement; forbearance of excursion.
 They are subject to errors from a narrowness of soul, a fixation and confinement of thought to a few objects. Watts.
 4. Want of volatility; destruction of volatility.

Upon the compound body three things are chiefly to be observed;
 the colour, the fragility or pliancy, and the volatility or fixation, compared with the simple bodies. Bacon.
 It is more difficult to make gold (if other metals less ponderous and less material, than via versa, to make silver of lead or quicksilver, both which are more ponderous than silver; so that they need rather a degree of fixation than any condensation.
Bacon's Natural History.
 5. Reduction from fluidity to firmness.
 Salt dissolved, upon a fixation returns to its affected cubes.
Glantz, Scip. c. 7.

Fi'xedly. adv. [from fixed.] Certainly; firmly; in a manner settled and established.
 If we pretend that the distinction of species, or sorts, is fixedly established by the real and secret constitutions of things. Locke.
Fi'xedness. n. f. [from fixed.]
 1. Stability; firmness.
 2. Want or loss of volatility.
Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex idea signified by the word gold. Locke.
 3. Solidity; coherence of parts.
 All matter is either fluid or solid, to comprehend all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies.
Leonty's Sermons.

4. Steadiness; settled opinion or resolution.
 A fixedness in religion will not give my conscience leave to consent to innovations. King Charles.
Fi'x'dity. n. f. [from fixed.] Coherence of parts, oppos'd to volatility. A word of Egypt.
 Bodies mingled by the fire are differing as to fixedity and volatility, and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire, that itself does scarce afterwards separate them. Boyle.
Fi'xity. n. f. [from fixity, French.] Coherence of parts, oppos'd to volatility.

And are not the sun and fixed stars great earths vehemently hot, whose heat is conveyed by the greatness of the bodies, and the mutual action and reaction between them, and the light which they emit, and whose parts are kept from fuming away, not only by their fixity, but also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them? Newt. Opt.
Fi'xure.

Fi'xure. n. f. [from fix.]
 1. Position.
 The fixure of her eye hath motion in't,
 As we were mock'd with art. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
 2. Stable pressure.
 The firm fixure of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
 3. Firmness; stable state.
 Frights, changes, horrors,
 Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
 The unity and married calm of states
 Quite from their fixure. Shakespeare's Troil. and Cressida.

 strike fish.

FLA'BBY. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Soft; not firm; easily shaking or yielding to the touch.
 Paleness, a weak pulse, palpitations of the heart, flabby and black flesh, are symptoms of weak fibres. Arbutnot.
 Pulls out the rags contriv'd to prop
 Her flabby dugs, and down they drop. Swift.
FLA'BILE. adj. [flabilis, Latin.] Blown about by the wind;
 subject to be blown. Diels.
FLA'CCID. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Weak; limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.
 The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be is, that the part against which the sun beatech waxeth more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower. Bacon.
 They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unfit to pronounce the letter r. Holder's Elements of Speech.
 The surgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce fungus, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbutnot on Diet.
FLACCIDITY. n. f. [from flaccid.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.
 There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flaccidity joined with infensibility. Wishman's Surgery.
 To FLAG. v. n. [flaggeren, Dutch; pleozaan, Saxon, to fly.]
 1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.
 Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in the which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together. Abbot.
 The jades
 That drag the tragick melancholy nights,
 Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings
 Clip dead men's graves. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
 It keeps those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl. Boyle's Spring of the Air.
 Like a fiery meteor sunk the fun,
 The promise of a storm; the shifting gales
 Forsake by fits, and fill the flagging sails. Dryden.
 2. To grow spiritless or dejected.
 My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
 Like fowl in air too damp, and lags along
 As if she were a body in a body:
 My senses too are dull and stupidly'd,
 Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches. Dryden, D. Seb.
 The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen. Swift.
 3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.
 Juice in language is somewhat less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.
 His stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour, and grow peevish if he passes it; either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite. Locke.
 There must be a noble train of actions to preserve his fame in life and motion; for, when it is once at a stand, it naturally flags and languishes. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 256.
 If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
 My love above the stary vault I raise,
 Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
 I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust. Arbutnot.
 He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches 'till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us. Swift.
 To FLAG. v. a.
 1. To let fall; to suffer to droop.
 Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
 As well as Cupid, Time is blind:
 Soon must those glories of thy face
 The fate of vulgar beauty find:
 The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,
 Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die. Prior.
 2. [From flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.
 The sides and floor are all flagged with excellent marble. Sandys.

FLA

A white stone used for flagging floors. Woodward on Fossils.
FLAG. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A water plant with a broad bladed leaf and yellow flower, so called from its motion in the wind.
 She took an ark of bulrushes, and laid it in the flags by the river's brink. Ex. ii. 3.
 Can bulrushes but by the river grow?
 Can flags there flourish where no waters flow. Sandys.
 There be divers fishes that call their spawn on flags or stones. Walton's Angler.
 Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds. Mortimer.
 2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.
 These flags of France that are advanced here,
 Before the eye and prospect of your town,
 Have hither march'd to your endamage. Shak. K. J. bn.
 He hangs out as many flags as he decrieth vessels; square, if ships; if galleys, pendants. Sandys's Travels.
 Let him be girt
 With all the grisly legions that troop
 Under the footy flag of Acheron, Harpies and hydras, or all the monstrous forms
 'Twixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him out,
 And force him to restore his purchase back,
 Or drag him by the curls to a foul death. Milton.
 The French and Spaniard, when your flags appear,
 Forget their hatred, and consent to fear. Waller.
 The interpretation of that article about the flag is a ground at pleasure for opening a war. Temple.
 In either flag the golden serpents bear;
 Erecting crests alike, like volumes rear;
 And mingle friendly hissings in the air. Dryden's Aurenga.
 Then they, whose mothers, frantic with their fear,
 In woods and wilds the flags of Bacchus bear,
 And lead his dances with dishevell'd hair. Dryden's Æn.
 3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements. [jaebes, old French.]
 Part of two flags striated, but deeper on one side than the other. Woodward on Fossils.
 Flagstone will not split, as slate does, being found formed into flags, or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata. Woodward's Met. Foss.
FLAG-BROOM. n. f. [from flag and broom.] A broom for sweeping flags or pavements, commonly made of birch-twigs, or of the leaves of the dwarf palm, imported from Spain.

 instrument of wind music.
 Play us a lesson on your flaglet. Moré's Divine Dialogues.
FLAGELLATION. n. f. [from flagello, Latin.] The use of the scourge.
 By Bridewell all descend,
 As morning pray'r and flagellation end. Garth's Dispens.
FLA'GGINESS. n. f. [from flaggy.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension.
FLA'GGY. adj. [from flag.]
 1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.
 His flaggy wings, when forth he did display,
 Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind
 Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way. Fairy Queen, b. i.
 That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,
 And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry. Dryden's Virgil.
 2. Weak in taste; insipid.
 Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a colewort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple. Bacon's Natural History.
FLAGITIOUS. adj. [from flagitiu, Latin.] Wicked; vil-laneous; atrocious.
 No villany or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.
 There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline. LeEstrange.
 First, those flagitious times,
 Pregnant with unknown crimes,
 Conspire to violate the nuptial bed. Rescommon.
 Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Addison.
 But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
 Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,
 Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
 Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times. Pope.

FLA

FLAGITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from flagitiosus.] Wickedness; villainy.

FLAGON. n. f. [flaggon, Welsh; flaxe, Saxon; flafke, Danish; flacon, French; flafce, Italian; flafce, Spanish.] A vessel of drink with a narrow mouth.

A mad rogue! he pour'd a flagon of Rhenish on my head on c.

More had sent him by a sutor in Chancery two silver flagons.

Did they coin pipots, bowls, and flagons?

In officers of horse and dragons? Hadibras, p. i. cant. 2.

His trusty flagon, full of potent juice,

Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use. Recommon.

One flagon walks the round, that none should think

They either change, or tint him of his drink. Dryd. Juu.

FLAGRANCY. n. f. [flagrantia, Latin.] Burning; heat; fire.

Lust causeth a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts.

FLAGRANT. adj. [flagrans, Latin.]

1. Ardent; burning; eager.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, stirreth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain. Hooker, b. v. f. 39.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Sappho, at her toilet's greasy task,

And issuing flagrant to an evening mask:

So morning insects, that in muck begun,

Shine, buz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope's Epistles.

3. Red; imprinted red.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,

The beadle's last still flagrant on their back. Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming.

When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation.

With equal poize let steady justice sway,

And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;

But, till the proofs are clear, the stroke delay. Smith.

FLAGRATION. n. f. [flagro, Latin.] Burning.

FLAGSTAFF. n. f. [flag and staff.] The staff on which the flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,

On wings of all the winds to combat flies:

His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,

And bloody crotches on his flagstaffs rife. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

FLAIL. n. f. [flagellum, Latin; siegel, German.] The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear.

Our soldiers, like the night owl's lazy flight,

Or like a lazy thresher with a flail,

Fell gently down as if they struck their friends. Sh. H. VI.

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,

His shadowy flail hath thrifl'd the corn,

That ten day-labourers could not end,

Then lies him down the lubbar-fend. Milton.

In this pile should reign a mighty prince,

Born for a course of wit, and flail of sense. Dryden.

The dextrous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon's and Cincinnatus's skill in arms, nor make them less able in the arts of war and government.

The thresher, Duke, could o'er the queen prevail;

The proverb says, no fence against a flail. Swift.

FLAKE. n. f. [flaccus, Latin.]

1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

O crimson circles, like red flakes in the element, when the weather is hottest.

And from his wide devouring oven sent

A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,

Him all amaz'd, and almost made afraid. Fairy Queen.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice. Burn.

Small drops of a milling rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up.

2. A stratum; layer; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,

As not to be divorced by a wound. Sandys.

A labourer in his left hand holding the head of the center-pin, and with his right drawing about the beam and teeth, which cut and tore away great flakes of the metal, 'till it received the perfect form the teeth would make.

3. To flake. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak pole no winds inclement blow,

Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow. Pope's Odys.

FLAKY. adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,

And flaky darkness breaks within the East. Shaks. Rich. III.

The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,

With sparks that seem to set the world on fire. Pope.

Hence, when the snows in Winter cease to weep,

And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,

The banks with eate their humble streams contain,

Which swell in Summer, and those banks disdain. Blackm.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminae.

FLAM. n. f. [A cant word of no certain etymology.] A falsehood; a lye; an illusory pretext.

A flam more senseless than the rog's

Of old aru'picy and aug'ry. Hadibras, p. ii. cant. 3.

'Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion.

What are most of the histories of the world but lyes? Lyes immortalized and consigned over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity.

FLAM. n. f. [from the French flamme, a flame.] A transient blaze; a sudden explosion of flame from fat or dripping; and so in Scotland transferred to any thing glozing and flashily illusory.

The king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy. Dryden.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the Sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death. Adair's Journal.

FLAME. n. f. [flamma, Latin; flamme, French.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is, is not as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame.

What flame, what lightning e'er

So quick an active force did bear!

2. Fire.

Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;

The flames he once stole from thee, grant him now. Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,

This and Philaster have the loudest fame;

Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame:

In both our English genius is expert,

Lofty and bold, but negligently dress'd. Wallar.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smitten with the love of kindred arts we came,

And met congenial, mingling flame with flame. Pope.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flame, and does like fire

To her aspire. Cowley.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove

All the extremities of love. Cowley.

No warning of th' approaching flame;

Swiftly like sudden death it came:

I lov'd the moment I beheld. Granville.

To FLAME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

 As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to all licentiousness. Spenser.
 You start away,
 And lend no ear unto my purposes;
 Those prisoners you shall keep:
 — I will, that's flat. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

FLA

Thus reptil'd, our final hope
 Is flat despair: we must exasperate
 Th' Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
 And that must end us. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
 If thou sin in wine or wantonness,
 Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
 Frailty gets pardon by submissiveness:
 But he that boasts, thrusts that out of his story:
 He makes flat war with God, and doth defy
 With his meek clod of earth the spacious sky. Herbert.
 You had broke and robb'd his house,
 And stole his talismanique louse;
 And all his new-found old inventions,
 With flat felonious intentions. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. i.

 FLATULENT. adj. [from flatulentus, flatu, Latin.]
 1. Turgid with air; windy.
 Pease are mild and demulcent; but being full of aerial particles, are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion. Arbutnot.
 Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger; but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again: these are so light as scarce to be felt by the patient, and no otherwise incommode than by their unsightliness or bulk. Quincy.
 2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.
 To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our grosser faculties, is a flatulent vanity. Glanville. Sceff. c. 23.
 How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works. Dryden.
 FLATULOSITY. n. f. [from flatulosus, French, from flatu, Latin.] Windiness; fulness of air.
 The cause is flatulosity; for wind stirred, moveth to expel; and all purgers have in them a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly. Bacon.
 FLAT'ULOUS. adj. [from flatu, Latin.] Windy; full of wind.
 Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and overcome, being not *flatu*ous nor loathsome; and so sendeth it to the mesenteric veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down urine. Bacon's Natural History, N° 44.
 FLAT'US. n. f. [Latin.] Wind gathered in any cavity of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore diffused by warm aromatics. Quincy.
 FLAT'WISE. adj. [from flat and wise.] So it should be written, not flatways.
 Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parallel to the fits of the stratum in which it was reposed. Woodward on Fossils.

FLA

To FLAUNT. v. n.

1. To make a fluttering show in apparel.

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove

With flaunting honeyfuckle. *Milton.*These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently enough fain to imitate their own desires to their vanity. Boyle.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,

For useless ornament and flaunting show:

We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,

And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine. *Dryden's Juvenal.*You tot, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-gilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

2. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper.

Fortune in men has some small difference made;

One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade. *Pope's Essay.*FLAUNT. n. f. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble,

Wildly bound up, what would he say! or how

Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold

The sternness of his preference! *Shaksp. Winter's Tale.*FLAVOUR. n. f.

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 488.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,

With bending heaps, to nigh their bloom disclose,

Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows. *Dry.*FLAVOURS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degen'tate there, and fruits declin'd

From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind. Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAW. n. f. [Φλάω, to break; plo, Saxon, a fragment; flaw, Dutch, broken in mind.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws,

Or ere I weep. *Shaksp. King Lear.*Wool, new-thorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the bung-hole open. *Bacon's Natural History.*We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw. Boyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found;

'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound. Dryden's Pers.

As if great Atlas, from his height,

Should sink beneath his heavenly weight;

And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it shall,

Should gape immense, and, rushing down, o'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,

Or some frail China-jar receive a flaw. *Pope.*He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin. Swift.

2. A fault; defect.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scribes venerers and brokers do value unfound men to serve their own turn. Bacon's Essays.

Traditions were a proof alone,

Could we be certain such they were, so known:

But since some flaws in long descents may be,

They make not truth, but probability. Dryden.

And laid her dowry out in law,

To null her jointure with a flaw. *Hudibras, p. iii. c. i.*Their judgment has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires. *Addison's Spectator.*3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from fluo, Latin.]So many flaws had this vow in its first conception. Atter.

Being incens'd, he's fain

As humours as Winters, and as sudden

As flaws congealed in the fanning of day. Shaksp. Hen. IV.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,

Should patch a wall, 't' expel the Winter's flaw. Shaksp. Ham.

As a huge fish, laid

Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw

Shoots back; so, sent against the ground, [fraid,

Was foil'd Eurialus. Chapman's Iliads.

Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,

And frow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,

Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argettes loud,

And Thræcias rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton.

I heard the rack,

As earth and sky would mingle; but myself

Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear them,

As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,

Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,

Are to the main inconsiderable. Milton's Paradise Lost.

FLA

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,

Until the golden circuit on my head

Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw. Shaksp. Hen. VI.

The fort's revolted to the emperor,

The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,

And deluges of armies from the town

Came pouring in: I heard the mighty flaw;

When first it broke, the crowding ensigns saw

Which choak'd the passage. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts;

Impostors to true fear, would become

A woman's story at a Winter's fire. *Shaksp. Macbeth.*To FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure.

But his flaw'd heart,

Alack, too weak the conflict to support;

'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,

Burst smilingly. Shaksp. King Lear.

The cup was flaw'd with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup. Boyle.

The brazen cauldrons with the froths are flaw'd,

The garment stiff with ice, at hearths is thaw'd. Dryden.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd

Our merchants goods. *Shaksp. Henry VIII.*FLAWLESS. adj. [from flaw.] Without cracks; without defects.A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more vast, and more flawless, shines only bright enough to make itself conspicuous. *Boyle on Colours.*FLAWN. n. f. [plena, Saxon; flan, French; vlaye, Dutch.]A fort of custard; a pie baked in a dish. *Diët.*To FLAWTER. v. a. To scrape or pare a skin. *Atter.*FLAWY. adj. [from flaw.] Full of flaws.FLAX. n. f. [pleax, plex, Saxon; vlay, Dutch.]

1. The fibrous plant of which the finest thread is made.

The leaves, for the most part, grow alternately on branches: the cup of the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulous, and divided into five parts at the top: the flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a clove-gillflower: the ovary, which rises from the centre of the flowercup, becomes an almost globular fruit, which is generally pointed, and composed of many cells, in which are lodged many plain smooth seeds, which are blunt at one end, and generally sharp at the other. The species are six. The first sort is that which is cultivated for use in divers parts of Europe, and is reckoned an excellent commodity. It should be cultivated. Miller.

2. The fibres of flax cleaned and combed for the spinner.

I'll fetch some flax, and whites of eggs,

To apply to's bleeding face. Shaksp. King Lear.

Then on the rock a scanty measure place

In found of peace or wars,
No harp e'er hit the stars. Ben. Johnson's New-Imm.
FLESHY. adj. [from flesh.]
1. Plump; full of flesh; fat; muscular.
All Ethiopes are fleshy and plump, and have great lips; all which betoken moisture retained, and not drawn out. Bacon.
We say it is a fleshy stile when there is much periphrases and circuit of words, and when with more than enough it grows fat and corpulent. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.
The sole of his foot is flat and broad, being very fleshy, and covered only with a thick skin; but very fit to travel in sandy places. Ray.
2. Pulpous; plump: with regard to fruits.
Those fruits that are so fleshy, as they cannot make drink by expression, yet may make drink by mixture of water. Bacon.
FLETCHER. n. f. [from flec, an arrow, French.] A manufacturer of bows and arrows.
It is commended by our fletchers for bows, next unto yew.

FLEW. n. f. The large chaps of a deep-mouthed hound. Hamm.
FLEWED. adj. [from flew.] Chapped; mouthed.
My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So flew'd, so fanded, and their heads are hung
With ears that sweep away the morning dew. Shaksp.
FLEXANIMOUS. adj. [flexanimus, Latin.] Having power to change the disposition of the mind. Ditt.
FLEXIBILITY. n. f. [flexibilis, French, from flexible.]
1. The quality of admitting to be bent; pliancy.
Do not the rays which differ in refrangibility differ also in flexibility? And are they not, by their different inflexions, separated from one another, so as after separation to make the colours? Newton's Opt.
Corpuscles of the same set agree in every thing; but those that are of diverse kinds differ in specific gravity, in hardness, and in flexibility, as in bigness and figure. Woodward.
2. Easiness to be persuaded; ductility of mind; compliance; facility.
Advise me to resolve rather to err by too much flexibility than too much perverseness, by meekness than by self-love.
Hammond's Pract. Catech.
FLEXIBLE. adj. [flexibilis, Latin; flexible, French.]
1. Possible to be bent; not brittle; easy to be bent; pliant; not stiff.
When splitting winds
Make flexible the knees of knotted oaks. Sh. Trail. and Cress.
Take a stock-gillyflower and tie it upon a stick, and put them both into a stoop glass full of quicksilver, so that the flower be covered: after four or five days you shall find the flower fresh, and the stalk harder and less flexible than it was.
Bacon's Natural History, No. 796.
2. Not rigid; not inexorable; complying; obsequious.
Phocyon was a man of great severity, and no ways flexible to the will of the people. Bacon.
3. Ductile; manageable.
Under whose care forever a child is put to be taught, during the tender and flexible years of his life, it should be one who thinks Latin and language the least part of education. Lacks.
4. That may be accommodated to various forms and purposes.
This was a principle more flexible to their purpose. Rogers.
FLEXIBLENESS. n. f. [from flexible.]
1. Possibility to be bent; not brittleness; easiness to be bent; not stiffness; pliancy; pliancy.
I will rather chafe to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead, whose embafed flexibility shall be forced to bend. King Charles.
Keep those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl. Boyle's Spring of the Air.
2. Facility; obsequiousness; compliance.
3. Ductility; manageableness.
The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable. Lacks.

FLI

- FLEXILE*. adj. [flexilis, Latin.] Pliant; easily bent; obsequious to any power or impulse.
Every flexile wave
Obeys the blast, th' aerial tumult swells. Thomson's Summer.
FLEXION. n. f. [flexio, Latin.]
1. The act of bending.
2. A double; a bending; part bent; joint.
Of a sinuous pipe that may have some four flexions, trial would be made. Bacon's Natural History, No. 222.
3. A turn towards any part or quarter.
Put cauteh sometimes tears, and a flexion or cast of the eye aside. Bacon's Natural History, No. 71.
FLEXOR. n. f. [Latin.] The general name of the muscles which act in contracting the joints.
Flatterers, who have the flexor muscles so strong that they are always bowing and cringing, might in some measure be corrected by being tied down upon a tree by the back. Artuth.
FLEXUOUS. adj. [flexuosus, Latin.]
1. Winding; full of turns and meanders; tortuous.
In regard of the soul, the numerous and crooked narrow crannies, and the restrained flexuous rivulets of corporeal things, are all contemptible. Digby on the Soul.
2. Bending; not strait; variable; not steady.
The trembling of a candle discovers a wind, that otherwise we do not feel; and the flexuous burning of flames doth shew the air beginneth to be unquiet. Bacon's Natural History.
FLEXURE. n. f. [flexura, Latin.]
1. The form or direction in which any thing is bent.
Contrary is the flexure of the joints of our arms and legs to that of quadrupeds: our knees bend forward, whereas the same joint of their hind legs bends backward. Ray.
2. The act of bending.
The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shak. Trail. and Cress.
3. The part bent; the joint.
His mighty strength lies in his able loins,
And where the flexure of his navel joins. Sandy.
4. Obsequious or servile cringe.
Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bends? Shak. Hen. V.
To FLICKER. v. a. [fligher, Dutch; pliecpaan, Saxon.]
To flutter; to play the wings; to have a fluttering motion.
Under th' allowance of your grand aspect,
Whose influence, like the wreath of radiant fire,
On flickering Phœbus' front. Shaksp. King Lear.
'Twas ebbing darkness, past the mid' of night,
And Phosphor, on the confines of the light,
Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;
The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
And flick'ring on her nest, made short essays to sing. Dry.
At all her stretch her little wings she spread,
And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;
Then flick'ring to his pallid lips, she strove
To print a kiss, the last essay of love. Dryden.
FLYER. n. f. [from fly.]
1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.
Cam'st thou from where they made the stand?
—I did;
Though you, it seems, came from the fliers. Shak. Cymbel.
The gates are ope, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Now the fliers from and forsakers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them. King Charles.
2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest; as in a jack.
The flier, tho't had laden feet,
Turn'd so quick, you scarce could see't. Swift.
FLIGHT. n. f. [from To fly.]
1. The act of flying or running from danger.
And now, too late, he wishes for the flight,
That strength he wasted in ignoble flight. Denham.
He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,
And claims the prize because he best did run. Dryd. Ind. Em.
As eager of the chace, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;
Pan saw and lov'd, and, burning with desire,
Pursu'd her flight; her flight increas'd his fire. Pope.
2. Removal to another place.
The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;
And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,
She to the Latian palace took her flight. Dryden's Æn.
3. The act of using wings; volation.
For he so swift and nimble was of flight,
That from this lower tract he dar'd to fly
Up to the clouds, and thence with pinions light
To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spenser's Alucop. tms.
Winds that tempell's brew,
When through Arabian groves they take their flight,
Made wanton with rich odours, lose their spice. Dryden.
4. Removal

FLI

4. Removal from place to place by means of wings.
Ere the bat hath flown
His cloyster'd flight. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The fowls shall take their flight away together. 2 Ed. v. 6.
Fowls, by Winter forc'd, forsake the floods,
And wing their hasty flight to happier lands. Dryden's En.
5. A flock of birds flying together.
Flights of angels wing thee to thy rest. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
They take great pride in the feathers of birds; and this they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited unto it by the infinite flights of birds that came up to the high grounds. Bacon's New Atlantis.
I can at will, doubt not,
Command a table in this wilderness;
And call swift flights of angels ministrant,
Array'd in glory, on my cup attend. Milton's Par. Lost.
6. The birds produced in the same season: as, the harvest flight of pigeons.
A volley; as a shower; as much shot as is discharged at once.
At the first flight of arrows sent,
Full three-score Scots they flew. Cherry Chase.
Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like to many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Gulliver's Travels.
8. The space past by flying.
Heat of imagination; fallacy of the soul.
Old Pindar's flights by him are reacht,
When on that gale his wings are stretcht. Denham.
He shew'd all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has failed in some of his flights, it was but because he attempted every thing. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.
Strange graces fill, and stranger flights the had;
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope, Epistle ii.
Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,
When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fail. Pope.
10. Excursion on the wing.
If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one might imagine that the interest of France were but to conserve its present greatness. Temple.
It is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly, to deride these things. Tillotson, Sermon 2.
11. The power of flying.
In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
- FLIGHTY. adj. [from flight.]
1. Fleeting; swift.
Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
2. Wild; full of imagination.
FLIMSY. adj. [Of this word I know not any original, and suspect it to have crept into our language from the cant of manufacturers.]
1. Weak; feeble; without strength of texture.
2. Mean; spiritless; without force.
Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines. Pope, Epistle ii.
- TO FLINCH. v. n. [corrupted from fling. Skinner.]
1. To shrink from any suffering or undertaking; to withdraw from any pain or danger.
Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other; nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom. South's Sermons.
A child, by a constant course of kindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usage without flinching or complaining. Locke.
Oh ingratitude, that John Bull, whom I have honoured with my friendship, should flinch at last, and pretend that he can disburse no more money. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
2. In Shakespeare it signifies to fail.
If I break time, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die. Shakespeare.
- FLINCHER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who shrinks or fails in any matter.
TO FLING. preter. flung; part. flung or flung. v. a. [from fligo, Latin, Skinner: according to others from fling; so to sing is to fling.]
1. To cast from the hand; to throw.
The matrons flung their gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs Upon him. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
'Tis fate that flings the dice; and as the flings,
Of kings makes peasants, and of peasants kings. Dryden.
2. To dart; to cast with violence.
How much unlike that Hector who return'd Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among
A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung. Denham.
3. To scatter.
Every beam new transient colours flings,
Colours that change whenever they wave their wings. Pope.
4. To drive by violence.

I

FLI

- A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
5. To move forcibly.
The knight feeling his habitation reduced to so small compact, ordered all the apartments to be flung open. Addison's Spect.
 6. To eject; to dismiss.
Cromwell, I charge thee fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
 7. To cast reproach.
I know thy gen'rous temper:
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it;
It strait takes fire. Addison's Cat.
 8. To force into another condition; properly into a worse.
Squalid fortune, into baseness flung,
Doth scorn the pride of wonted ornaments. Spenser.
 9. To FLING down. To demolish; to ruin.
These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing. Woodward's Natural History.
 10. To FLING off. To baffle in the chase; to defeat of a prey.
These men are too well acquainted with the chase to be flung off by any false steps or doubles. Addison's Spectator.
 - TO FLING. v. n.
1. To flounce; to wince; to fly into violent and irregular motions.
The angry beast
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if he had been beside his sense. Hudibras, p. 1. cant. 2.
Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them
wince and fling as if they had some mettle. Tillotson's Sermons.
 2. To FLING out. To grow unruly or outrageous: from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs.
Duncan's horses,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contending 'gainst obedience. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 - FLING. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A throw; a cast.
2. A gibe; a sneer; a contemptuous remark.
No little scribbler is of wit so bare,
But has his fling at the poor wedded pair. Addison.
I, who love to have a fling
Both at senate-house and king,
Thought no method more commodious
Than to throw their vices odious. Swift.
 - FLINGER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. He who throws.
2. He who jeers.
 - FLINT. n. f. [plur. Saxon.]
1. A semi-pellucid stone, composed of crystal debased, of a blackish grey, of one similar and equal substance, free from veins, and naturally invested with a whitish crust. It is sometimes smooth and equal, more frequently rough: its size is various. It is well known to strike fire with steel. It is useful in glassmaking. Hill on Flint.
Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred;
A flint will break upon a featherbed. Clovenland.
There is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled by a beam from the sun. South's Sermons.
Take this, and lay your flint edge'd weapon by. Dryden.
I'll fetch quick fuel from the neigh'ring wood,
And strike the sparkling flint, and dress the food. Prior.
 2. Any thing eminently or proverbially hard.
Your tears, a heart of flint Might tender make. Spenser.
Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault. Sh. Ant. and Cleop.
 - FLINTY. adj. [from flint.]
1. Made of flint; strong.
Tyrant custom
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down. Shakespeare's Othello.
A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back. Dryden.
 2. Full of stones.
The gathering up of flints in flinty ground, and laying them on heaps, is no good husbandry. Bacon's Natural History.
 3. Hard of heart; cruel; savage; inexorable.
I did him a desired office,
Dear almost as his life; which gratitude,
Through flinty Tartar's bosom, would peep forth,
And answer thanks. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.
 - FLIPP. n. f. [A cant word.] A liquor much used in ships, made by mixing beer with spirits and sugar.
The tar-pawlin and swabber is lolling at Madagascar, with some drunken funburnt whore, over a can of flip. Denham.
 - FLIPPA'NT. adj. [A word of no great authority, probably derived from flip-flap.]

1. Nimble;

FLI

1. Nimble; moveable. It is used only of the act of speech.
An excellent anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble or flippant. Addison.
2. Pert; talkative.
Away with flippant epilogues. Thomson.
- FLIPPANTLY. adv. [from the adjective.] In a flowing prating way.
To FLIRT. v. a. [Skinner thinks it formed from the sound.]

2. To run about perpetually; to be unsteady and flitting.
FLIRT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A quick clatrick motion.
In unfurling the fan are several little flirts and vibrations, as also gradual and deliberate openings. Addison's Spectator.
Before you pass th' imaginary flirts
While the spread fan o'erlades your closing eyes,
Then give one flirt, and all the vision flies. Pope.
2. A sudden trick.
Have licence to play,
At the hedge a flirt,
For a sheet or a flirt. Ben. Johnson's Gypsies.
3. A pert young hussy.
Scurvy knave, I am none of his flirt gills; I am none of his skains mates. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
Several young flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world. Addison's Guardian, No. 109.
- FLIRTATION. n. f. [from flirt.] A quick sprightly motion. A cant word among women.
A muslin flounce, made very full, would give a very agreeable flirtation air. Pope.
- TO FLIT. v. n. [from To fleet; or from flitter, Danish, to remove.]
1. To fly away.
Likest it seemeth, in my simple wit,
Unto the fair sunshine in Summer's day,
That when a dreadful storm away is flit,
Through the broad world doth spread his goodly ray. Spenser.
His grudging ghost did strive
With the frail flesh; at last it flitted is,
Whither the souls do die of men that live amiss. Fairy Qu.
2. To remove; to migrate. In Scotland it is still used for removing from one place to another at quarter-day, or the usual term.
So hardly he the flitted life does win,
Unto her native prison to return. Fairy Queen, cant. 7.
It became a received opinion, that the souls of men, departing this life, did flit out one body into some other. Hooker.
3. To flutter; to rove on the wing.
He made a glancing shot, and mis'd the dove;
Yet mis'd so narrow, that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd, by the foot, the flitting bird. Dryden's En.
Fear the just gods, and think of Scylla's fate!
Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air. Pope.
4. To be flur or unfatle.
Himself up high he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divide
The yielding air, which nigh too feeble found Her flitting parts, and element unsound. Fairy Queen, b. i.
He stoop'd at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryden's En.
- FLIT. adj. [from flit.] Swift; nimble; quick.
And in his hand two darts exceeding flit,
And deadly sharp, he held; whose heads were dight,
In position and in blood, of malice and delight. Fairy Qu.
- FLITCH. n. f. [plur. Saxon; flycke, Danish; fleche, flache, French. Skinner.] The side of a hog salted and cured.
But heretofore 'twas thought a sumptuous feast,
On birthdays, festivals, or days of state,
A salt dry flitch of bacon to prepare;
If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare. Dryden's Juv.
While he from out the chimney took
A flitch of bacon off the hook,
Cut out large slices to be fry'd. Swift.
He sometimes accompanies the present with a flitch of bacon. Addison.
- FLITTERMOUSE. n. f. The bat.
- FLITTING. n. f. [plur. Saxon, scandal.] An offence; a fault.

- FLIX. n. f. [corrupted from flax.] Down; fur; soft hair.
With his loll'd tongue he faintly licks his prey;
His warm breath blows her fix up as the lies:
She trembling creeps upon the ground away,

FLO

- And looks back to him with beseeching eyes. Dryden.
- FLIXWOOD. n. f. See HEDGE-MUSTARD.
- TO FLOAT. v. n. [from flut, French.]
1. To swim on the surface of the water.
When the sea was calm, all boats alike
Shew'd mastership in floating. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
The ark no more now floats, but seems on ground,
Fast on the top of some high mountain fix'd. Mit. P. L.
That men, being drown'd and sunk, do float the ninth day, when their gall breaketh, are popular affirmations. Brown.
Three blustering nights, born by the southern blast,
I floated; and discover'd land at last. Dryden's En. b. vi.
His rosy wreath was dropt not long before,
Born by the tide of wine, and floating on the floor. Dryden.
On frothy billows thousands float the stream,
In cumbrous mail, with love of farther shore. Phillips.
Carp are very apt to float away with fresh water. Mortimer.- 2. To move without labour in a fluid.
What divine monsters, O ye gods, were these That float in air, and fly upon the seas! Dryd. Ind. Emp.
Swift they descend, with wing to wing conjoin'd,
Stretch their broad plumes, and float upon the wind. Pope.
- 3. To pass with a light irregular course.
Floating visions make not deep impressions enough to leave in the mind clear, distinct, lasting ideas. Locke.
- TO FLOAT. v. a. To cover with water.
Proud Pactolus floats the fruitful lands,
And leaves a rich manure of golden sands. Dryden's En.
Venice looks, at a distance, like a great town half floated by a deluge. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
Now fmoaks with show'rs the misty mountain-ground,
And floated fields lie undistinguished round. Pope's Statius.
The vast parterres a thousand hands shall make:
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake. Pope.
- FLOAT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of floating; the flux; the contrary to the ebb. A sense now out of use.
Our trust in the Almighty is, that with us contentions are now at their highest float. Hooker, Preface.
Of this kind is some disposition of bodies to rotation, particularly from East to West; of which kind we conceive the main float and reflux of the sea is, which is by content of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon's Nat. History.
- 2. Any body so contrived or formed as to swim upon the water.
They took it for a ship, and, as it came nearer, for a boat;
but it proved a float of weeds and rushes. L'Estrange's Fables.
A passage for the weary people make;
With other floats the standing water throw,
Of mally tones make bridges, if it flow. Dryden's Virgil.
- 3. The cork or quill by which the angler discovers the bite of a fish.
You will find this to be a very choice bait, sometimes casting a little of it into the place where your float swims. Walt. n.

especially if she be floaty, and want sharpness of way forwards. Raleigh's Essays.
- FLOCK. n. f. [flocce, Saxon.]
1. A company; usually a company of birds or beasts.
She that hath a heart of that fine frame,
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will the love when the rich golden shaft
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else
That live in her. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
- 2. A company of sheep, distinguished from herds, which are of oxen.
The cattle in the fields, and meadows green,
Those rare and solitary; these in flocks
Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upspring. Milton.
France has a sheep by her, not only as a sacrifice, but to show that the riches of the country consisted chiefly in flocks and pasturage. Addison on ancient Medals.
- 3. A body of men.
The heathen that had fled out of Judea came to Nicanor by flocks. 2 Mac. xiv. 14.
- 4. [From flocus.] A lock of wool.
A house well furnish'd shall be thine to keep;
And, for a flock bed, I can cheer my sheep. Dryden.
- TO FLOCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather in crowds or large numbers.
Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet
the time carelessly. Shakespeare's As you like it.
Upon the return of the ambassadors, the poor of all sorts flocked together to the great master's house. Knolles's History.
Others ran flocking out of their houses to the general supplication. 2 Mac. iii. 18.
Stilpo, when the people flocked about him, and that one said, The people come wondering about you, as if it were to see

FLO

see some strange beast; no, faith he, it is to see a man which Diogenes fought with his lantern at noon-day. Bacon.
Seeing the spirits swelling the nerves cause the arm's motion, upon its resistance they flow from other parts of the body to overcome it. Digby on Bodies.

The wits of the town came thither;
Each strongly confident of his own way,
Thought to gain the laurel that day. Suckling.
Friends daily flow. Dryden's Æn.
The Trojan youth about the captive flow,
To wonder, or to pity, or to mock. Denham.

His stepmother, making all her gestures counterfeit affliction, lay almost groveling upon the floor of her chamber. Sidon.

He rent that iron door
With furious force, and indignation fell;
Where entered in, his foot could find no floor,
But all a deep descent as dark as hell. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Look how the floor of heav'n
Is thick inlay'd with patens of bright gold:
There's not the smallest orb which thou beholdest,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quivering to the young ey'd cherubims. Shakespeare.

The ground lay strewn with pikes so thick as a floor is usually strewn with rushes. Hayward.
He winnoweth barley to-night in the threshing floor. Ruth.

To FLO'UNDER. v. n. [from flounce.] To struggle with violent and irregular motions: as a horse in the mire.

Down goes at once the horseman and the horse;
That courser stumbles on the fallen steed,
And flound'ring throws the rider o'er his head. Dryden.

The

FLO

The more inform'd, the less he understood,
And deeper sunk by flound'ring in the mud. Dryden.

He clamps the bit, impatient of his loss,
And starts aside, and flounders at the cross. Dryden.

He plung'd for sense, but found no bottom there;
Then writ and flound'ring on, in mere despair. Pope's Dunci.

To FLOURISH. v. n. [florere, florere, Latin.]

1. To be in vigour; not to fade.

The righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree. Pf. xcii. 12.

Where e'er you tread, the blushing flow'rs shall rise,
And all things flourish where you turn your eyes. Pope.

2. To be in a prosperous state.

If I could find example
Of thousands, that had struck anointed kings,
And flourish'd after, I'd not do't: but since Nor brass, nor stone, nor parchment, bears not one,
Let villany itself forswear't. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Harry, that prophesied thou should'st be king,
Doth comfort thee in sleep; live thou and flourish. Shakespeare.

He was the patron of my manhood, when I flourish'd in the opinion of the world, though with small advantage to my fortune. Dryden's Dedicat. to Lord Clifford.

3. To use florid language; to speak with ambitious copiousness and elegance.

Whilst Cicero acts the part of a rhetorician, he dilates and flourishes, and gives example instead of rule. Baker.

You should not affect to flourish in a copious harangue and a diffusive style in company. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

They dilate sometimes, and flourish long upon little incidents, and they skip over and but lightly touch the drier part of their theme. Watts's Logic.

With shadowy verdure flourish'd high,
A sudden youth the groves enjoy. Fenton.

2. To adorn with figures of needle work.

3. To work with a needle into figures.

All that I shall say will be but like bottoms of thread close wound up, which, with a good needle, perhaps may be flourish'd into large works. Bacon's War with Spain.

4. To move any thing in quick circles or vibrations by way of show or triumph.

And all the powers of hell in full applause
Flourish'd their snakes, and to's'd their flaming brands. Cra.

Against the post their wicker shields they crush, Flourish the sword, and at the plastron push. Dryden's Tro.

5. To adorn with embellishments of language; to grace with eloquence ostentatiously diffusive.

We should add the labours of Hercules, though flourish'd with much fabulous matter; yet it doth notably set forth the content of all nations and ages in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating giants, monsters and tyrants. Bacon.

6. To adorn; to embellish; to grace.

To bring you thus together, 'tis no fin,
Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

FLOURISH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Bravery; beauty.

I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune;
I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The presentation of but what I was. Shakespeare's Richard III.

The flourish of his sober youth,
Was the pride of naked truth. Craha.

2. An ostentatious embellishment; ambitious copiousness; far-fetched elegance.

This is a flourish: there follow excellent parables. Bacon.

We can excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow the flourish of poetry thereon, or those commendatory conceits which popularly set forth the eminence of this creature. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 5.

The apprehension is so deeply rivetted into my mind, that such rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen or brush it out. More's Divine Dialogues.

Villanies have not the same countenance, when there are great interests, plausible colours, and flourishes of wit and rhetoric interposed between the sight and the object. L'Estr.

The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches was commonly the truest word they spoke, tho' least believed by them. South's Sermons.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he flurs his crimes;
He lards with flourishes his long harangue;
'Tis fine, say't thou; what to be prais'd, and hang? Dryden.

3. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.

A child with delight looks upon emblems finely drawn and painted, and takes some pleasure in beholding the neat charaeters and flourishes of a bible curiously printed. Boyle.

They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flourishes about a great letter that signify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye. More against Atheism.

FLOURISHER. n. f. [from flourish.] One that is in prime or in prosperity.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld, they may, or in his flow'r;

For not our greatest flourisher can equal him in pow'r. Chapman's Iliad.

To FLOUT. v. a. [fluyten, Dutch; flouten, Frisick.] To mock; to insult; to treat with mockery and contempt.

You must flout my insufficiency. Shakespeare.

The Norwegian banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices;
Certainly he flouted us downright. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

She rail'd at her, that the should be so immodest to write to one the knew would flout her. Shakespeare.

Philicia flouts me. Walton's Angler.

To FLOUT. v. n. To practise mockery; to behave with contempt; to sneer.

Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off this argument? Shakespeare.

With talents well endu'd
To be scurrilous and rude;
When you perty raise your snout,
Flee and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

FLOUT. n. f. [from the verb.] A mock; an insult; a word or act of contempt.

He would ask of those that had been at the other's table,
Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.

She opened it, and read it out,
With many a smile and leering flout. Hudibras, p. iii.

Their doors are barr'd against a bitter flout;
Snarl, if you please; but you shall snarl without. Dryden.

How many flouts and jeers must I expose myself to by this repentance? How shall I answer such an old acquaintance when he invites me to an imtemperate cup? Calamy's Serm.

FLOUTER. n. f. [from flout.] One who jeers.

To FLOW. v. n. [plop, Saxon.]

1. To run or spread as water.

The god am I, whose yellow water flows
Around these fields, and fattens as it goes. Dryden's Æn.

Fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden.

Endless tears flow down in streams. Swift.

2. To run; opposed to standing waters.

With other flows the standing water flow;
Of mally stones make bridges, if it flow. Dryden.

2. To rise; not to ebb.

This river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between. Shakespeare.

3. To melt.

Oh that thou wouldst rent the heavens, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence. Is. lxiv. 1.

4. To proceed; to issue.

I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from't,
I shall do good. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

The knowledge drawn from experience is quite of another kind from that which flows from speculation or discourse. South.

5. To glide smoothly without aperity: as, a flowing period.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been of a great wit and flowing eloquence. Hakewill on Providence.

6. To write smoothly; to speak volubly.

Virgil is sweet and flowing in his hexameters. Dryden.

Did sweeter sounds adorn my flowing tongue
Than ever man pronounc'd, or angel sung. Prior.

7. To abound; to be crowded.

The dry streets flow'd with men. Chapman.

8. To be copious; to be full.

Then shall our names,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shak. Hen. V.

There e'ry eye with stum'rous chains the bound,
And dash'd the flowing goblet to the ground. Pope's Odyssey.

9. To hang loose and waving.

He was clothed in a flowing mantle of green silk, interwoven with flowers. Spettator, No. 425.

To Flow. v. a. To overflow; to deluge.

In a hot dry Summer watering would be a very great advantage to hops; but it is scarce practicable, unless you have a stream at hand to flow the ground. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Flow. n. f.

FLO

- of enterprising greedily, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood. Pope.
3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue. Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better. South.
- FLOW'ER. n. f. [fleur, French; flor, flores, Latin.]
1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds. Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petala, a stamen, apex and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller ones, and which usually have but one single style; and compounded, which consist of many flosculi, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one intire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petala, or leaves; as in borage, buglofs, &c. or polypetalous, which have distinct petala, and those falling off singly, and not all together, as the seeming petala of monopetalous flowers always do: but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage, deadnettle, &c. A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-fistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the aristotochia: 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcissus, &c. but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and so represents a kind of helmet, or monkhood; and from thence these are frequently called galeate, cucullate, and galeculatæ flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes also the lamium is intire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Coriculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as in the linaria, delphinium, &c. and the carniculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are either, first, discous or discoidal; that is, whose flosculi are set together so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which therefore, because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petala standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolious, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched uneven and jagged, as the hieracia, &c. 3d, fistular, which is compounded of many long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jaggs at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petala, are called staminateous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the july, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cat-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.
- Good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying ere they sicken. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
- With flow'ry inwoven tresses torn,
The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton.
- Beauteous flow'rs why do we spread
Upon the monuments of the dead?
Though the same fun with all diffusive rays
Blush in the rose and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his power,
And always let the gem above the flower. Pope.
- If the blossom of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips, and carnations. Watts.
2. An ornament; an embellishment. This discourse of Cyprian, and the excellent flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been a sweet and powerful orator. Huicwill on Providence.
- Truth needs no flow'rs of speech. Pope.
3. The prime; the flourishing part. Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long: In flow'ry age you perish for a long. Pope's Horace Impr.
4. The edible part of corn; the meal. The bread I would have in flower, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want. Spenser on Ireland.
- I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flow'ry of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
- The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a fort of glue. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FLO

- But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd,
Next these in worth, and firm those urns be seal'd;
Be twice ten measures of the choicest flour
Prepar'd, ere yet descends the evening hour. Pope's Odyssey.
5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence. The choice and flower of all things profitable the Palms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form. Hosker.
- Thou hast slain
The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
- The French monarchy is exhausted of its bravest subjects; the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Addison.
6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable. He is not the flower of courtesy; but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
- FLOW'ER de Luce. n. f. A bulbous iris. It hath a lily flower of one leaf, shaped like that of the common iris: the pointal has three leaves, and the empaleme turns to a fruit shaped like that of the common iris. Its root is bulbous. Milner specifies thirty-four species of this plant; and among them the Persian flower de luce is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.
- Crop'd are the flower de luce in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
- The iris is the flower de luce. Peacham.
- To FLOW'ER. v. n. [flurir, French, or from the noun.]
1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers. So forth they marched in this goodly fort,
To take the solace of the open air,
And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport. Fairy Queen.
- Sacred hill, whose head full high,
Is, as it were, for endless memory
Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,
For ever with a flow'ring garland crown'd. Fairy Queen.
- Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd, Op'ning their various colours. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
- Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load. Dryden's Georg.
- To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,
And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed. Pope's Messiah.
2. To be in the prime; to flourish. Whilome in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring,
Like swallow swift, I wandered here and there;
For heat of heedless lust me did so sting,
That I of doubted danger had no fear. Spenser's Pastoral.
- This cause detain'd me all my flow'ring youth,
Within a loathsome dungeon there to pine. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer. Those above water were the best, and that beer did flower a little; whereas that under water did not, though it were fresh. Bacon's Natural History, N. 385.
- An extreme clarification doth spread the spirits to smooth that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flowering. Bacon's Natural History.
4. To come as cream from the surface. If you can accept of these few observations, which have flower'd off, and are, as it were, the burnishing of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of. Milton on Education.
- To FLOW'ER. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with fictitious or imitated flowers. Sometimes her head she fondly would disguise
With gaudy garlands, or fresh flow'rets dight,
About her neck, or rings of ruffles plight. Fairy Queen.
- No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flow'rets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile pacer. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
- That same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,
Stood now within the pretty flow'ret's eyes,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail. Shakespeare's As You Like It.
- So to the sylvan lodge
They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,
With flow'rets deck'd, and fragrant smells. Milton's Par. Lost.
- Then laughs the childish year with flow'rets crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around;
But no substantial nourishment receives,
Infirm the stalks, unfold are the leaves. Dryden's Fables.
- FLOW'ER GARDEN. n. f. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated. Observing that this manure produced flowers in the field, I made my gardener try those shells in my flower garden, and I never saw better carnations or flowers. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- FLOW'ERINESS. n. f. [from floweriness.]
1. The state of abounding in flowers. 2. Floridness

FLU

2. Floridness of speech. FLOW'ERING BUSH. n. f. A plant. The leaves are triangular and grassy, the stalks naked, and the flowers disposed in an umbella upon the top of the stalk, each consisting of six leaves: three of them are large, and three small, which are expanded in form of a rose. Milner.
- FLOW'ERT. adj. [from flower.] Full of flowers; adorned with flowers real or fictitious. My mother Circe, with the syrens three, Amid't the flow'ry kirtl'd Naiades. Milton.
- Day's harbinger
Comes dancing from the East, and leads with her
The flow'ry May, who from her green lap throws
The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose. Milton.
- O'er his fair limbs a flow'ry vest he threw. Pope's Odyssey.
- To her the shady grove, the flow'ry field,
The streams and fountains, no delight could yield. Pope.
- FLOW'INGLY. adv. [from flow.] With volubility; with abundance. FLOWK. n. f. [flake, Scott.] A flounder; the name of a fish. Amongst these the flawk, sole, and plaice follow the tide up into the fresh waters. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
- FLOW'KWORT. n. f. The name of a plant. FLOWN. Participle of fly, or flee, they being confounded.
1. Gone away. For those,
Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,
Flown to the upper world. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
- Where, my deluded sense! was reason flown?
Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.
2. Puffed; inflated; elate. And when night
Darkens the freets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine. Milton's P. L.
- FLOW'RY. adj. [flutrans, Latin.] Wavering; uncertain. To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand willing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuant wandering humour and opinion? L'Estrange.
- To FLUCTUATE. v. n. [fluctus, Latin.]
1. To roll to and again as water in agitation. The fluctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious meteors hovering there,
And the wide regions of the land, proclaim
The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame. Blackmore.
2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.
3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion. The temper
New part puts on; and, as to passion mov'd, Fluctuates disturb'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes. As the greatest part of my estate has been hitherto of an uneasy and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements. Addison's Spectator, N. 549.
5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined. FLUCTUATION. n. f. [fluctuatio, Latin; fluctuation, French, from fluctuate.]
1. The alternate motion of the water. Its fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interjacency irregulates. Brown's Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 17.
- They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth. Woodward's Natural History.
2. Uncertainty; indetermination. It will not hinder it from making a profelyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgment little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but error. Boyle.
- FLUE. n. f. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from flew of fly.]
1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.
2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind. FLUELIN. n. f. The herb SPEEDWELL.
- FLUENCY. n. f. [from fluent.]
1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity. Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit. Garth's Preface to Ovid.
2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility. Our public liturgy must be calmer, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency. King Charles.
- Th' unthinking victors vainly boast their pow'rs;
Be their's the mulquet, while the tongue is ours:
We reason with such fluency and fire,
The beaux we baffle, and the learned tire. Tickell.
- The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is a master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both. Swift's Thoughts on various Subjects.

FLU

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete. Those who grow old in fluency and ease, Behold him tost on seas. Sandys's Paraphrase on Job.
- God riches and renown to men imparts,
Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.
- FLU'ENT. adj. [fluens, Latin.]
1. Liquid. It is not malleable; but yet is not fluent, but stupified. Bacon.
2. Flowing; in motion; in flux. Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being absolutely independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must necessarily continue to do so the next. Ray on the Creation.
3. Ready; copious; voluble. Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech. Bacon.
- I shall lay before you all that's within me,
And with most fluent utterance. Denham's Sople.
- FLU'ENT. n. f. Stream; running water. Confiding in their hands, that sed'ulous strive
To cut th' outrageous fluent; in this distress, Ev'n in the fight of death. Phillips.
- FLUID. adj. [fluidus, Latin; fluide, French.] Having parts easily separable; not solid. Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud, Left it again dissolve, and show'r the earth? Milt. P. Lost.
- If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton's Opt.
- FLUID. n. f. [In physics.] Any animal juice: as the blood. Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.
- FLUIDITY. n. f. [fluiditas, Fr. from fluid.] The quality in bodies opposite to solidity; want of adherence between the parts. Heat promotes fluidity very much, by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance. Newton's Opt.
- A disease opposite to this spiffitude is too great fluidity. Arb.
- FLUIDNESS. n. f. [from fluid.] That quality in bodies opposite to stability. What if we should say that fluidness, and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.
- FLUMMERY. n. f. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheatsflower or oatmeal. Milk and flummery are very fit for children. Lucke.
- FLUNG. participle and prete ite of fling. Thrown; cast. Several statues the Romans themselves flung into the river, when they would revenge themselves. Addison on Italy.
- FLU'OR. n. f. [Latin.]
1. A fluid state. The particles of fluids which do not cohere too strongly, and are of such a smallness as renders them most susceptible of those agitations which keep liquors in a fluor, are most easily separated and rarified into vapours. Newton's Opt.
2. Catamenia. FLU'ARY. n. f.
1. A gust or storm of wind; a hasty blast. The boat was overfet by a sudden flurry from the North. Gulliver's Travels.
2. Hurry; a violent commotion. To FLUSH. v. n. [fluere, Dutch, to flow; fluus, or flux, Fr.]
1. To flow with violence. The pulse of the heart he attributes to an ebullition and sudden expansion of the blood in the ventricles, after the manner of the milk, which, being heated to such a degree, doth suddenly, and all at once, flus up and run over the vessel. Ray.
- It flusbes violently out of the cock for about a quart, and then stops. Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. To come in haste. If the place but affords
Any store of lucky birds,
As I make 'em to flusbe,
Each owl out of his bush. Ben. Johnson's Owls.
3. To glow in the skin; to produce a colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood. Had left the salt of most unrighteous tears
She married. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
- Thus Eve with count'enance blithe her story told,
But in her cheek distemper flusbing glow'd. Milt. Par. Lost.
- What can be more significant than the sudden flusbing and confusion of a blush? Collier of the Aspects.

What

FLU

- What means that lovely fruit? What means, alas!
That blood, which flushes guilty in your face? Dryden.
At once, array'd
In all the colours of the flushing year,
The garden glows. Thomson's Spring, l. 95.
4. To shine. Obsolete.
A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.
To FLUSH. v. a.
1. To colour; to redden.
The glowing dames of Zama's royal court,
Have faces flush'd with more exalted charms. Addison's Cato.
Some court, or secret corner seek,
Nor flush with flame the passing virgin's cheek. Gay's Triv.
2. To elate; to elevate.
A prosperous people, flush'd with great victories and successes, are rarely known to confine their joys within the bounds of moderation and innocence. Listerbury's Sermons.
FLUSH. adj.
1. Fresh; full of vigour.
He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows, save heav'n? Shak.
I love to wear cloths that are flush,
Not preface old rags with plush. Cleveland.
2. Affluent; abounding. A cant word.
Lord Strat was not very flush in ready, either to go to law or clear old debts; neither could he find good bail. Arbuthnot.
FLUSH. n. f. Afflux; sudden impulse; violent flow.
Never had any man such a loss, cries a widower, in the flush of his extravagancies for a dead wife. L'Estrange.
The pulse of the arteries is not only caused by the pulsation of the heart, driving the blood through them in manner of a wave or flush, but by the coats of the arteries themselves. Ray.
Success may give him a present flush of joy; but when the short transport is over, the apprehension of losing succeeds to the care of acquiring. Rogers's Sermon.
2. Cards all of a sort.
To FLUSH. v. a. [from To flush.] To make hot and rosy with drinking; to make half drunk.
Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have I to-night flush'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Shakespeare's Othello.
FLUTE. n. f. [flute, flute, French; flute, Dutch.]
1. A musical pipe; a pipe with stops for the fingers.
Th' oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke. Shak. Ant. and Cleo.
The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute. Dryden.
2. A channel or furrow in a pillar, like the concave of a flute split.
To FLUTE. v. a. To cut columns into hollows.
To FLUTTER. v. n. [pleozer, Saxon; flutter, French.]
1. To take short flights with great agitation of the wings.
As an eagle stirr'd up her nest, flutter'd over her young, and spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him. Deut. xxxii. 11.
When your hands untie these strings,
Think you've an angel by the wings;
One that gladly will be nigh,
To wait upon each morning-sigh;
To flutter in the balmy air
Of your well-perfumed pray'r.
They fed, and, flut'ring, by degrees withdrew. Dryden.
2. To move about with great show and bustle without consequence.
Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.
No rag, no scrap of all the beau or wit,
That once so flut'ring, and that once so writ. Pope's Dunciad.
3. To be moved with quick vibrations or undulations.
Ye spirits! to your charge repair;
The flut'ring fan be Zephyretta's care. Pope.
They the tall mast above the vessel rear,
Or teach the flut'ring sail to float in air. Pope's Odyssey.
4. To be in agitation; to move irregularly; to be in a state of uncertainty.
The relation being brought him what a glorious victory was got, and with what difficulty, and how long the flut'ring upon the wings of doubtful success, he was not surpris'd.
Hevel's Vocal Forest.
It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or disagreement of ideas, whilst their thoughts flutter about, or stick only in founts of doubtful signification. Locke.
Esteem we these, my friends! event and chance,
Produc'd by atoms from their flut'ring dance! Prior.
Some never arrive at any deep, solid, or valuable knowledge, because they are perpetually flut'ring over the surface of things. Watts.
His thoughts are very flut'ring and wandering, and cannot be fix'd attentively to a few ideas successively. Watts.
To FLUTTER. v. a.
7. To drive in disorder, like a flock of birds suddenly roused.

FLY

- Like an eagle in a dovecoat, I
Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
2. To hurry the mind.
3. To disorder the position of any thing.
FLUTTER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Vibration; undulation; quick and irregular motion.
An infinite variety of motions are to be made use of in the flutter of a fan: there is the angry flutter, the modest flutter, and the timorous flutter. Addison's Spectator, N^o. 102.
2. Hurry; tumult; disorder of mind.
3. Confusion; irregular position.
FLUTTER. adj. [flutatus, Latin.] Belonging to rivers.
FLUX. n. f. [fluxus, Latin; flux, French.]
1. The act of flowing; passage.
The most simple and primary motion of fire is a flux, in a direct line from the centre of the fuel to its circumference.
Digby on Bodies.
By the perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body. Arbuthnot.
2. The state of passing away and giving place to others.
The heat of the sun in animals whose parts are successive, and in a continual flux, can produce a deep and perfect gloss of blackness. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 10.
What the stated rate of interest should be, in the constant change of affairs, and flux of money, is hard to determine. Locke.
In the constituent matter of one body, turning naturally to another like body, the stock or fund can never be exhausted, nor the flux and alteration sensible. Woodward.
Languages, like our bodies, are in a perpetual flux, and stand in need of recruits to supply the place of those words that are continually falling through disuse. Felton on the Cliffs.
3. Any flow or issue of matter.
Quinces stop fluxes of blood. Arbuthnot on Diet.
4. Dysentery; disease in which the bowels are excoriated and bleed; bloody flux.
Eat eastern spices, secure
From burning fluxes and hot calenture. Hallifax.
5. Excrement; that which falls from bodies.
Civet is the very uncleanly flux of a cat. Shakespeare.
6. Concourse; confluence.
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company. Shakesp. As you like it.
7. The state of being melted.
8. That which mingled with a body makes it melt.
FLUX. adj. [fluxus, Latin.] Unconstant; not durable; maintained by a constant succession of parts.
To FLUX. v. a.
1. To melt.
2. To salivate; to evacuate by spitting.
He might fashionably and genteelly have been duelled or flux'd into another world. South.
FLUXION. n. f. [fluxus, Latin.] Easiness of separation of parts; possibility of liquefaction.
Experiments seem to teach, that the supposed aversion of nature to a vacuum is but accidental, or in consequence, partly of the weight and fluidity, or at least flexibility of the bodies here below. Boyle.
FLUXION. n. f. [fluxus, Latin.]
1. The act of flowing.
2. The matter that flows.
3. [In mathematics.] The arithmetick or analysis of infinitely small variable quantities; or it is the method of finding an infinite small or infinitely small quantity, which, being taken an infinite number of times, becomes equal to a quantity given.
A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, are not worth the labour of those who design the learned professions as the business of life. Watts.
To FLY. pret. flew or fled; part. fled or flown. v. n. [pleozer, Saxon. To fly is properly to use wings, and gives flew and flown. To flee is to escape, or go away, clean, Saxon, and makes fled. They are now confounded.]
1. To move through the air with wings.
Ere the bat hath flown
His cloister'd flight. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven. Gen. i. 20.
These men's hastiness the warrier sort of you do not commend: ye wish they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown. Hooker.
2. To pass through the air.
Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. Job v.
3. To pass away.
Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhyme,
Help thee to pass the tedious time;
Which else would on thy hand remain;
Though flown, it ne'er looks back again. Prior.
4. To pass swiftly.
The scouts with flying speed
Return, and through the city spread the news.
Earth rolls back beneath the flying speed. Dryden.
5. To

FLY

5. To spring with violence; to fall on suddenly.
A servant that he bled, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, therewith enrag'd,
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead. Shakesp.
Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth, and bark and fly at him. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat. South's Sermons.
6. To move with rapidity.
Glad to catch this good occasion,
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
A fair example to his master gave;
He bafled heads, to save his own, made fly;
And now, the sultan to preserve, must die. Waller.
7. To burst asunder with a sudden explosion.
Behold, a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.
8. To break; to shiver.
[plain, Saxon; fliehen, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. [In this sense the verb is properly to flee, when fled is formed; but the following examples shew that they are confounded.]
Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,
As lion fierce, upon the flying prey. Spenser.
Macduff is fled to England. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Ye shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake. Zech. xiv. 5.
1 Sa. xxii. 20.
Abiathar escaped, and fled after David. 1 Sa. xxii. 20.
What wonder if the kindly beams he shed,
Reviv'd the drooping arts again;
If science rais'd her head,
And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled. Dryden.
He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,
And live in shades with her and love alone. Prior.
Till fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;
From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,
Forake mankind, and all the world but love. Pope.
10. To fly in the face. To insult.
This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself. Swift's Drapier's Letters.
11. To act in defiance.
Fly in nature's face:
—But how, if nature fly in my face first?
—Then nature's the aggressor. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
12. To fly off. To revolt.
Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all the night! mean fetches;
The images of revolt, and flying off. Shakesp. King Lear.
The traitor Syphax
Flew off at once with his Numidian horde. Addison's Cato.
13. To FLY out. To burst into passion.
How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out
In contumelies, makes a noise, and stinks. Ben. Jonson's Catil.
Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect. Collier's Friendship.
14. To FLY out. To break out into licence.
You use me like a courser spur'd and rein'd:
If I fly out, my fierceness you command. Dryden.
Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship; but in times of war, when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent.
Dryden's Medal, Dedicat.
15. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.
All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley's Sermons.
16. To fly off. To discharge.
The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky. Graville.
17. To be light and unencumbered; as, a flying camp.
To FLY. v. a.
1. To shun; to avoid; to decline.
Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues;
Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues. Shakesp.
O Jove, I think
Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean,
Where they should be relieved. Shakesp.
If you fly physick in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it. Bacon's Essays.
O whether shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this horrid spectacle. Milton's Agonistes.
2. To refuse association with.
Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares oppress'd,
And his toss'd limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 13.
3. To quit by flight.
Nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.

FOA

- Dedalus, to fly the Cretan thore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who fail'd in air. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.
4. To attack by a bird of prey.
If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. Bacon.
5. It is probable that flew was originally the preterite of fly, when it signified volation, and fled when it signified escape:
flown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded.
FLY. n. f. [pleoge, Saxon.]
1. A small winged insect of many species.
As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare's King Lear.
My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn. Locke.
2. To prevent the fly, some propose to sow affies with the seed.
To heedless flies the window proves
A constant death. Thomson's Summer.
3. That part of a machine which, being put into a quick motion, regulates and equalises the motion of the rest.
If we suppose a man tied in the place of the weight, it were easy, by a single hair fastened unto the fly or balance of the jack, to draw him up from the ground. Wilkins.
3. FLY, in a compass. That part which points how the wind blows.
To FLY-BLOW. v. a. [fly and blow.] To taint with flies; to fill with maggots.
I cannot discern any labyrinth, unless in the perplexity of his own thoughts; for I am unwilling to believe that he doth it with a design to play tricks, and to flyblow my words, to make others distrust them. Stillingfleet.
Like a flyblown cake of tallow;
Or, on parchment, ink turn'd yellow. Swift.
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and flyblow in the setting sun. Pope's Epistles.
FLY-BOLT. n. f. [fly and bolt.] A kind of vessel nimble and light for sailing.
FLY-CATCHER. n. f. [fly and catch.] One that hunts flies.
There was more need of Brutus in Domitian's days, to redeem or mend, than of Horace, to laugh at a flycatcher. Dry.
The swallow was a flycatcher as well as the spider. L'Estr.
FLYER. n. f. [from fly.]
1. One that flies or runs away.
They hit one another with darts, as the others do with their hands, which they never throw counter, but at the back of the flyer. Sandy's Journey.
He grieves so many Britons should be lost;
Taking more pains, when he beheld them yield,
To save the flyers than to win the field. Waller.
2. One that uses wings.
3. The fly of a jack.
4. [In architecture.] Stairs made of an oblong square figure, whose fore and back sides are parallel to each other, and so are their ends: the second of these flyers stands parallel behind the first, the third behind the second, and so are said to fly off from one another. Maxim's Mech. Exer.
To FLY-FISH. v. n. [fly and fish.] To angle with a hook baited with a fly.
I shall next give you some other directions for fly-fishing. Walton's Angler.
FOAL. n. f. [pola, Saxon.] The offspring of a mare, or other beast of burthen. The custom now is to use call for a young horse, and foal for a young mare; but there was not originally any such distinction.
Also flew his speed,
And with his winged heels did tread the wind,
As he had been a foal of Pegafus's kind. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Twenty she-afles and ten foals. Gen. xxxii. 15.
To FOAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth a foal.
Give my horse to Timon: it foals me straight Ten able horses. Shakespeare's Timon.
Such colts as are
Of generous race, straight, when they first are foal'd,
Walk proudly. May's Georgicks.
About September take your mares into the house, where keep them 'till they foal. Mortimer's Husbandry.
FOALBIT. } n. f. Plants.
FOALFOOT. }
FOAM. n. f. [fām, Saxon.] The white substance which agitation or fermentation gathers on the top of liquors; froth; spume.
The foam upon the water. Hef. x. 7.
Whitenings, down their mossy tinctur'd stream
Defends the billowy foam. Thomson's Spring.
To FOAM. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To froth; to gather foam.
What a beard of the general's cut will do among foaming bottles and ale-wash'd wits, is wonderful. Shakesp. Henry V.
Cæsar fell down in the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

FOD

To Pallas high the foaming bowl he crown'd,
And sprinkl'd large libations on the ground. Pope's Odyssey.
Upon a foaming horse. Rew.
There follow'd frait a man of royal port.
2. To be in rage; to be violently agitated. Mar. ix. 18.
He foameth, and gnasheth with his teeth.
FOAMY, adj. [from foam.] Covered with foam; frothy.
More white than Neptune's foamy face,
When struggling rocks he would embrace. Sidney, b. ii.
Behold how high the foamy billows ride!
The winds and waves are on the jufter fide. Dryden.
FOB, n. f. [fuppe, fupfack, German.] A small pocket.
Who pick'd a fab at holding forth,
And where a watch for half the worth
May be redeem'd. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.
When were the dice with more profusion thrown?
The well-fill'd fab, not empty'd now alone. Dryd. Juven.
He put his hand into his fab, and presented me in his name with a tobacco-stopper. Addison's Spectator.
There were two pockets which we could not enter; these he called his fab: they were two large lints cut into the top of his middle cover, but squeezed close by the pressure of his belly. Gulliver's Travels.
Orphans around his bed the lawyer fees,
And takes the plaintiff's and defendant's fees;
His fellow pick-purse, watching for a job,
Fancies his fingers in the cully's fab. Swift.
To FOB, v. a. [fupfen, German.]
1. To cheat; to trick; to defraud.
I think it is scurvy, and begin to find myself fobb'd in
it. Shakespeare's Othello.
Shall there be a gallows standing in England when thou art king, and resolution thus fobb'd as it is with the rusty curb of old father antick law. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
He goes preening forward, 'till he was fobb'd again with another story. L'Estrange.
2. To FOB off. To shift off; to put aside with an artifice; to delude by a trick.
You must not think
To fof off our disgraces with a tale. Shakef. Coriolanus.
For they, poor knaves, were glad to cheat,
To get their wives and children meat;
But these will not be fof'd off so,
They must have wealth and power too. Hudibras, p. i.
By a Ravenna vintner once betray'd,
So much for wine and water mix'd I paid;
But when I thought the purchas'd liquor mine,
The rascal fof'd me off with only wine. Addison.
Being a great lover of country sports, I absolutely determined not to be a minister of state, nor to be fof'd off with a garter. Addison's Freeholder, No. 3.

Without the help of colours or of oil! Waller.
He had been foiled in the cure, and had left it to nature.
In their conflicts with sin they have been so often foiled, that they now despair of ever getting the day. Calamy's Serm.
Virtue, disdain, despair, I oft have try'd;
And, foi'd, have with new arms my foe defy'd. Dryden.
But I, the comfort of the Thunderer,
Have wag'd a long and unsuccessful war;
With various arts and arms in vain have toil'd,
And by a mortal man at length am foi'd. Dryden's Æn.
FOIL, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A defeat; a miscarriage; an advantage gained without a complete conquest.
We of thy cunning had no diffidence;
One sudden foi shall never breed distrust. Shakef. Hen. VI.
Whoever overthroweth his mate in such sort, as that either his back, or the one shoulder, and contrary heel do touch the ground, shall be accounted to give the fall: if he be endangered, and make a narrow escape, it is called a foi. Carew.
So after many a foi the tempter proud,
Renewing fresh assaults, amidst his pride,
Fell whence he should to see his victor fall. Milton's P. Lost.
When age shall level me to impotence,
And sweating pleasure leave me on the foi. Southern.
Death never won a stake with greater toil,
Nor e'er was fate so near a foi. Dryden.
2. [Faillie, French.] Leaf; gliding.
A stately palace, built of squared brick,
Which cunningly was without mortar laid,
Whose walls were high, but nothing strong nor thick,
And golden foi all over them display'd. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the glittering foi
Set off to th' world, nor in broad rumour lies. Milton.
3. Something of another colour near which jewels are set to raise their lustre.
As she a black silk cap on him begun
To set for foi of his milk-white to serve.
Like bright metal on a fallen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall these more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foi to set it off. Shak. Hen. IV.
The fallen passage of thy weary steps
Erecom a foi, wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy home. Shakespeare.
'Tis the property of all true diamonds to unite the foi closely itself, and thereby better augment its lustre: the foi is a mixture of malich and burnt ivory. Grav's Museum.
Hector has a foi to set him off: we are perpetually opposing the incontinence of Paris to the temperance of Hector.
Notes on the Odyssey.
4. [From sneller, French.] A blunt sword used in fencing.
He that plays the king shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foi and target. Shak. Hamlet.
FOILER, n. f. [from foi.] One who has gained advantage over another.
To FOIN, v. n. [poindre, Fr. Skinner.] To push in fencing.
He hew'd, and lash'd, and foin'd, and thunder'd blows,
And every way did seek into his life;
Ne plate, ne mail, could ward so mighty throws,
But yielded passage to his cruel knife. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
He cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out:
he will foin like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
Then both, no moment lost, at once advance
Against each other, arm'd with sword and lance:
They lash, they foin, they pass, they strive to bore
Their corselets, and the thinnest parts explore. Dryden.
FOIN, n. f. [from the verb.] A thrust; a push.
FOININGLY, adv. [from foin.] In a pushing manner.
FOISON, n. f. [poison, Saxon.] Plenty; abundance. A word now out of use.
Pay justly thy tithes, whatsoever thou be,
That God may in blessing send foison to thee. Tuff. Husb.
Be wilful to kill, and unkillful to store,
And look for no foison, I tell thee before. Tuffier's Husband.
Nature should bring forth,
To feed my innocent people. Shakespeare's Tempest.
As those that feed grow full, as blossoming time
That from the seedness the bare fallow brings
To teeming foison; so her plentiful womb Expresseth his full tilth and husbandry. Shak. Meas. for Meas.
To FOIST, v. a. [foyster, French.] To infect by forgery.
Left negligence or partiality might admit or foist in abuses

FOLIAGE. n. s. [folium, Latin; feuillage, French.] Leaves; tufts of leaves; the apparel of leaves to a plant.

The great columns are finely engraven with fruits and foliage, that run twisting about them from the very top to the bottom. Addison on Italy.

When swelling buds their od'rous foliage shed,
And gently harden into fruit, the wife
Spare not the little offsprings, if they grow Redundant. Phillips.

To FOLIATE. v. a. [foliatus, folium, Latin.] To beat into laminae or leaves.

Gold foliated, or any metal foliated, cleaveth. Bacon.
If gold be foliated, and held between your eyes and the light, the light looks of a greenish blue. Newton's Opt.

FOLIATION. n. s. [foliatio, folium, Latin.]

1. The act of beating into thin leaves.

2. Foliation is one of the parts of the flower of a plant, being the collection of those fugacious coloured leaves called petals, which constitute the compass of the flower; and also sometimes to secure and guard the fruit which succeeds the foliation, as in apples, pears, &c. and sometimes stands within it, as in cherries, apricots, &c. for these, being of a tender and pulpy body, and coming forth in the colder parts of the Spring, would be often injured by the extremities of weather, if they were not thus protected and lodged up within their flowers. Quincy.

FOLIATURE. n. s. [from folium, Latin.] The state of being hammered into leaves. Dick.

FOLIO. n. s. [in folio, Latin.] A large book, of which the pages are formed by a sheet of paper once doubled.

FOLIOMORPH. adj. [folium morium, Latin.] A dark yellow; the colour of a leaf faded; vulgarly called phylomet.

A flinty pebble was of a dark-green colour, and the exterior cortex of a foliomet colour. Woodward on Fossils.

FOLK. n. s. [polc, Saxon; volk, Dutch.]

1. People, in familiar language.

Never troubling him, either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy, but rather fitting to his dolorous discourses of their own and other folk's misfortune. Sidney.

Don't have married his sister, had his marriage in short time blessed, for he was folk wont to say, how unhappy soever the children after grow, with a son. Sidney.

When with greatest art he spoke,
You'd think he talk'd like other folk;
For all a rhetorician's rules
Teach nothing but to name his tools. Hadibrat, p. i.

2. Nations; mankind.

Thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Psalms lvi. 4.

3. Any kind of people as discriminated from others.

The river thrice hath flow'd, no ebb between;
And the old folk, time's dotting chronicles,
Say it did so a little time before. Shakespeare.

Anger is a kind of baseness; as it appears well in the weakness of children, women, old folk, and sick folk. Bacon's Essay.

4. It is now used only in familiar or burlesque language.

Old good man Dobson of the green,
Remembers he the tree has seen,
And goes with folk to shew the light. Swift.

He walk'd, and wore a threadbare cloak;
He din'd and sup'd at charge of other folk. Swift.

FOLKMORE. n. s. [from folk and more.]

Those hills were appointed for two special uses, and built by two federal nations: the one is that which you call folk-motes, built by the Saxons, and signifies in the Saxon a meeting of folk. Spenser on Ireland.

FOLLICLE. n. s. [folliculus, Latin.]

1. A cavity in any body with strong coats.

Although there be no eminent and circular follicle, no round bag or vesicle, which long containeth this humour; yet is there a manifest receptacle of choler from the liver into the guts. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 2.

2. Follicle is a term in botany signifying the seed-vesicles, capsulae feminis, or case, which some fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, pedicularis, &c. Quincy.

To FOLLOW. v. a. [folgian, Saxon; volgen, Dutch.]

1. To go after; not before or side by side.

I had rather, forthwith, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

2. To pursue as an enemy.

Wherever guilt can fly, revenge can follow. Irene.

3. To attend as a dependant.

And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and followed Saul to the battle. 1 Sa. xvii. 13.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion,

FOL

That in the nature of their lords rebels:
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shak. K. Lear.

Let not the muse then flatter lawless sway,
Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.

4. To pursue.

Not yielding over to old age his country delights, he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney, b. ii.

Some pious tears the pitying hero paid,
And follow'd with his eyes the fleeting shade. Dryden's Æn.

We follow fate, which does too fast pursue. Dryden.

5. To succeed in order of time.

6. To be consequential, as effects to causes.

7. To imitate; to copy.

Where Rome keepeth that which is ancienter and better, others, whom we much more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse, we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love. Hooker, b. v. f. 28.

Ill patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules. Locke on Education.

8. To obey; to observe.

If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no Christians. Tillotson, Preface.

Most men admire

Virtue, who follow not her lore. Paradise Regain'd, b. vii.

9. To confirm by new endeavours; to keep up indefatigably.

They bound themselves to his laws and obedience; and in case it had been followed upon them, as it should have been, they should have been reduced to perpetual civility. Spenser.

10. To attend to; to be busied with.

He that undertaketh and followeth other men's business for gain, shall fall into ruins. Ecclesiast. xxix. 9.

To FOLLOW. v. n.

1. To come after another.

Peter followed afar off. Luke xxii. 54.

The famine shall follow close after you. Jer. xlii. 16.

Welcome all that lead or follow

To the oracle of Apollo. Ben. Johnson.

2. To be posterior in time.

3. To be consequential, as effect to cause.

If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness mislead him, the mis- carriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

4. To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow. Locke.

5. To be consequential, as inference to premises.

Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country. Temple.

This dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow, from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power. Locke.

6. To continue endeavours.

Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord. Hof.

FOLLOWER. n. s. [from follow.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower; but now you are a leader: whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels? Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

No stop, no stay, but clouds of sand arise,
Spurn'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes. Dryden.

2. A dependant.

3. An attendant.

No follower, but a friend. Pope.

4. An associate; a companion.

How accompanied, canst thou tell that?
—With Poins, and other his continual followers. Sh. H. IV.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave unto them too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law. Spenser's State of Ireland.

The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide. South's Sermon.

And fore'd Æneas, when his ships were lost,
To leave his followers on a foreign coast. Dryden's Æn.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copyer; one of the same sort.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ. 1 Cor. xi. 1.

The true profession of Christianity invariably engages all its followers to do good to all men. Syran's Sermon.

Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have. Locke.

The studious head or gen'rous mind,
Follow'd of God, or friend of human kind,
Poet or patriot, rose but to restore
The faith and moral nature gave before. Pope's Essay.

FOLLOW.

FON

FOLLY. n. s. [folie, French.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.

2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.

Think! it thou, that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakespeare, King Lear.

3. Act of negligence or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it has a plural.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit;
For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy. Shakespeare.

Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please. Pope's Horace.

To FOMENT. v. a. [fomentor, Latin; fomentor, French.]

1. To cherish with heat.

Every kind that lives,
Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd. Milton's P. L.

2. To bathe with warm lotions.

He fomented the head with opiates to procure sleep, and a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead. Arbutnot.

3. To encourage; to support; to cherish.

They love their givings, and foment their deeds no less than parents do their children. Watson.

Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires,
Since nature gave, and thou fomentest my fires. Dryden.

They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them. Locke.

FOMENTATION. n. s. [fomentatio, Fr. from foment.]

1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuping, which is applying hot fluids to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and difficult obstructions humours. Quincy.

Fomentation callet forth the humour by vapours; but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultice, draweth gently the humours out: for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some stupefactive. Bacon's Natural History.

2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.

The medicines were prepared by the physicians, and the lotions or fomentations by the nurses. Arbutnot on Coins.

FOMENTER. n. s. [foment.] An encourager; a supporter

These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politic at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up in Druidia. Howell.

FON. n. s. [Scott. A word now obsolete.] A fool; an idiot.

Sicker I hold him for a greater fon,
That loves the thing he cannot purchase. Spenser's Past.

FOND. n. s. [fenn, Scottish.] A word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology. To fonne is in Chaucer to doat, to be foolish.

1. Foolish; silly; indifferent; imprudent; injudicious.

This we know that the Grecians or Gentiles did account foolishness; but that they ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard. Hooker, b. v. f. 12.

He was beaten out of all love of learning by a fond school-master. Ascham.

Tell these sad women,
'Tis fond to wall inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Grant I may never prove so fond

To trust man on his oath or bond. Shakespeare's Timon.

I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance. Shakespeare.

Fond thoughts may fall into some idle brain;
But one belief of all, is ever wife. Davies.

Thou see'st

How subtly to detain thee I devise,
Inviting thee to hear while I relate;
Fond! were it not in hope of thy reply. Milt. Paradise Lost.

So fond are mortal men,
Fall'n into wrath divine,
As their own ruin on themselves 't invite. Milton's Agonistes.

'Twas not revenge for griev'd Apollo's wrong
Those as's ears on Midas' temples hung;
But fond repentance of his happy with
But reason with your fond religion fights;
For many gods are many infinities. Dryden's Tyrant. Lov.

This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself. Tillotson.

2. Trifling; valued by folly.

Not with fond theles of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rate are either rich or poor
As fancy values them. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

3. Foolishly tender; injudiciously indulgent.

I'm a foolish fond wife,
Like Venus I'll shine. Addison.

Be fond and be fine. Addison.

4. Pleased in too great a degree; foolishly delighted.

FAME is in itself a real good, if we may believe Cicero; who was perhaps too fond of it. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

I, fond of my well-chosen feat,
My pictures, medals, books complete. Prior.

Some are so fond to know a great deal at once, and love to talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them. Watts's Improvem. of the Mind.

To FOND. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat with great

To FONDLE. v. a. indulgence; to caress; to coddle.

How'er unjust your jealousy appear,
It does my pity, not my anger move:
I'll fondle it as the forward child of love. Dryden's Aurengz.

When amidst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs, and fondles thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms confrains,
Thou may'st infuse thy venom in her veins. Dryden's Æn.

They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions. Gulliver's Travels.

To FOND. v. n. To be fond of; to be in love; to doat on.

How will this sadge? My master loves her dearly;
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And he, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shakespeare.

FONDLE. n. s. [from fond.] One who fondles.

FONDLING. n. s. [from fondle.] A person or thing much fondled or caressed; something regarded with great affection.

Partiality in a parent is commonly unlucky; for fondlings are in danger to be made fools, and the children that are least cockered make the best and wisest men. L'Estrange.

The bent of our own minds may favour any opinion or action, that may shew it to be a fondling of our own. Locke.

Any body would have guessed mis to have been bred up under a cruel stepdame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

Bred a fondling and an heirless,
Drest like any lady may reful;
Cocker'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

FONDLY. adv. [from fond.]

1. Foolishly; weakly; imprudently; injudiciously.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence. Shak. H. IV.

Sorrow and grief of heart

Makes him speak fondly, like a frantick man. Shakel. R. II.

Ficinus fondly adviseth, for the prolongation of life, that a vein be opened in the arm of some wholesome young man, and the blood to be sucked. Bacon's Natural History.

The military mound

The British files transcend, in evil hour
For their proud foes, that fondly brav'd their fate. Phillips.

Some valuing those of their own side or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind:
Fondly we think we merit honour then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope's Criticism.

Under those sacred leaves, secure
From common lightning of the skies,
He fondly thought he might endure
The flashes of Ardelia's eyes. Swift.

2. With great or extreme tenderness.

Ev'n before the fatal engine clos'd,
A wretched sylph too fondly interpos'd:
Fate urg'd the sheers, and cut the sylph in twain. Pope.

Fondly or severely kind. Savage.

FONDNESS. n. s. [from fond.]

1. Foolishness; weakness; want of sense; want of judgment.

Fondness it were for any, being free,
To covet fetters, though they golden be. Spenser's Sonnets.

2. Foolish tenderness.

My heart had still some foolish fondness for thee;
But hence! 'tis gone: I give it to the winds. Addison, Cato.

Hopelss mother!

Whose fondness could compare her mortal offspring
To those which fair Latona bore to Jove. Prior.

3. Tender passion.

Your jealousy perverts my meaning still;
My very hate is construed into fondness. A. Phill. Dist. Moth.

Corinna, with that youthful air,
Is thirty and a bit to spare:
Her fondness for a certain earl Began when I was but a girl. Swift.

4. Unreasonable liking.

They err that either through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance anything that is less than a sincere resolution of new obedience, attended with faithful endeavour, and meet fruits of this change. Hammond's Fundamentals.

FONT. n. s. [font, Latin; fonte, French.] A stone vessel in which the water for holy baptism is contained in the church.

The presenting of infants at the holy font is by their god-fathers. Hooker, b. ii. f. 7.

FOO

I have no name, no title;
No, not that name was given me at the font. Shaksp. R. II.
FOUNTAIN. n. f. [fontaine, French.] An issue; a discharge opened in the body.

A person plethorick, subject to hot defluxions, was advised to a fountain in her arm. Wifeman of Inflammation.
FOUNTAIN. n. f. [from the name of the first wearer.]
A knot of ribbons on the top of the head-dress. Out of use.

These old fashioned fontanges rose an ell above the head:
they were pointed like steeples, and had long loose pieces of crape, which were fringed, and hung down their backs. Addis.
FOOD. n. f. [foode, Sax. voeden, Dut. to feed; feed, Scott.]
1. Victuals; provision for the mouth.

On my knees I beg,
That thou'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food. Shaksp.
Much food is in the tillage of the poor. Prov. xiii. 23.

Under whose lowly roof thou hast vouchsaf'd
To enter, and these earthly fruits to taste;
Food not of angels, yet accepted so,
As that nought willingly thou couldst not seem
At heav'n's high feasts to have fed. Milton's Paradise Lost.
They give us food, which may with nectar vie,
And wax that does the absent fun supply. Waller.

2. Any thing that nourishes.
Give me some musick: musick, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.

O dear fon Edgar,
The food of thy abused father's wrath,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say, I had eyes again. Shaksp. King Lear.

FOODFUL. adj. [food and full.] Fruitful; full of food; plenteous.

There Titus was to see, who took his birth
From heav'n, his nursing from the foodful earth. Dryden.
FOODY. adj. [from food.] Eatable; fit for food.

To vessels, wine she drew;
And into well sew'd sacks pour'd foody meal. Chapman.
FOOL. n. f. [fo, Welsh; fol, Hollandic; fol, French.]

1. One whom nature has denied reason; a natural; an idiot.
Do'st thou call me fool, boy?
—All thy other titles thou hast given away that thou wast born with. Shaksp. King Lear.

The fool multitude, that chafe by show,
Not learning more than the fond eye doth teach,
Which pry not to the interior. Shak. Merchant of Venice.

It may be asked, whether the eldest son, being a fool, shall inherit paternal power before the younger, a wife man. Locke.
He thanks his stars he was not born a fool. Pope.

2. [In Scripture.] A wicked man.
The fool hath said in his heart there is no God. Pf. xiv. 1.

3. A term of indignity and reproach.
To be thought knowing, you must first put the fool upon all mankind. Dryden's J. Venal, Preface.

4. One who counterfeits folly; a buffoon; a jester.
Where's my knave, my fool? Go you, and call my fool hither. Shaksp. King Lear.

I scorn, although their drudge, to be their fool or jester. Milt.
If this disguise fit not naturally on so grave a person, yet it may become him better than that fool's coat. Denham.

5. To play the fool. To play pranks like a hired jester; to jest; to make sport.

Returning where I left his armour, found another instead thereof, and armed myself therein to play the fool. Sidney.

6. To play the fool. To act like one void of common understanding.

Well, thus we play the fools with the time,
And the spirits of the wife fit in the clouds
And mock us. Shaksp. Henry IV. p. ii.

Is it worth the name of freedom to be at liberty to play the fool, and draw shame and misery upon a man's self? Locke.

7. To make a fool. To disappoint; to defeat.
'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

TO FOOL. v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle; to toy; to play;
to idle; to sport.

I, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you; so you may continue and laugh at nothing still. Shaksp. Tempest.

Fool not; for all may have,
If they dare try, a glorious life, a grave. Herbert.
If you have the luck to be court-fools, those that have either wit or honesty, you may fool withal, and spare not. Denham.

It must be an indolent youth that provides against age; and he that fools away the one, must either beg or starve in the other. L'Estrange.

He must be happy that knows the true measures of fooling.
—Is this a time for fooling? L'Estrange, Fable 74.
TO FOOL. v. a. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

1. To treat with contempt; to disappoint; to frustrate; to defeat.

FOO

And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and shoo'd off? Shak. H. IV.
If it be you that stir these daughters hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much To bear it tamely. Shaksp. King Lear.

When I am read, thou seign'st a weak applause,
As if thou wert my friend, but lackest a cause:
This but thy judgment fools; the other way
Would both thy folly and thy spite betray. Den. Johnson.

Him over-weening
To over-reach; but with the serpent meeting,
Fool'd and beguiled. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
If men loved to be deceived and fooled about their spiritual estate, they cannot take a surer course than by taking their neighbour's word for that, which can be known only from their own heart. South's Sermons.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
For fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit.
I'm tir'd with waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.

I would advise this blinded set of men not to give credit to those, by whom they have been so often fooled and imposed upon. Addison's Freeholder, No. 7.

2. To infatuate.

It were an handsome plot,
But full of difficulties, and uncertain;
And he's so fool'd with downright honesty,
He'll ne'er believe it. Denham's Sophy.

A long and eternal adieu to all unlawful pleasures: I will no longer be fool'd or imposed upon by them. Calamy's Sermon.

A boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer and richer, perhaps fool him so far as to make him enjoy less in his riches than others in poverty. Temple.

3. To cheat; as, to fool one of his money.
FOOLBORN. adj. [fool and born.] Foolish from the birth.
Reply not to me with a foolborn jest. Shaksp. Henry IV.

FOOLERY. n. f. [from fool.]
1. Habitual folly.

To lery, fir, does walk about the orb like the sun; it shines every where: I would be sorry, fir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress. Shak. Twelfth Night.

2. An act of folly; trifling practice.
It is mere foolery, to multiply distinct particulars in treating of things, where the difference lies only in words. Watts.

3. Object of folly.
That Pythagoras, Plato, or Orpheus believed in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected. Raleigh's History.

We are transported with fooleries, which, if we understood, we should despise. L'Estrange's Fables.

FOOLHAPPY. adj. [fool and happy.] Lucky without contrivance or judgment.

As when a ship, that flies fair under sail,
An hidden rock escaped unawares,
That lay in wait her wreck for to bewail;
The mariner, yet half amazed, stares
At perils past, and yet in doubt ne dares
To joy at his foolhappy oversight. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 6.

FOOLHARDINESS. n. f. [from foolhardy.] Mad rashness; courage without sense.

A false glozing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly. South's Sermon.

There is a difference betwixt daring and foolhardiness; Lu-can and Statius often ventured them too far, our Virgil never. Dryden's Dunciad.

FOOLHARDINESS. n. f. [fool and hardiness, French.] Foolhardiness; adventurousness without judgment. Obsolete.

More huge in strength than wife in works he was,
And reason with foolhardy over-ran;
Stern melancholy did his courage pass,
And was, for terror more, all arm'd in shining brass. F. 2.

FOOLHARDY. adj. [fool and hardy.] Daring without judgment; madly adventurous; foolishly bold.

One mother, when as her foolhardy child
Did come too near, and with his talons play,
Half dead through fear, her little babe reviv'd. Fairy Queen.

Some would be so foolhardy as to presume to be more of the cabinet-council of God Almighty than the angels. Hawd.

If any yet be so foolhardy,
T' expose themselves to vain jeopardy;
If they come wounded off, and lame,
No honour's got by such a main. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

FOOLTRAP. n. f. [fool and trap.] A snare to catch fools in;
as a flytrap.

Betts, at the first, were fooltraps, where the wife
Like spiders lay in ambush for the flies. Dryden.

FOOLISH. adj. [from fool.]
1. Void of understanding; weak of intellect.

Thou foolish woman, feel thou not our mourning? 2 Esdr.
He, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

2. Imprudent; indiscreet.
We are come off

FOO

Like Romans; neither foolishly in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

3. Ridiculous; contemptible.
It is a foolish thing to make a long prologue, and to be short in the story itself. 2 Mac. ii. 32.

Pray do not mock me;
I am a very foolish fond old man;
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shaksp. King Lear.

What could the head perform alone,
If all their friendly aids were gone?
A foolish figure he must make;
Do nothing else but sleep and ake. Prior.

[In Scripture.] Wicked; sinful.
FOOLISHLY. adv. [from foolish.] Weakly; without understanding. In Scripture, wickedly.

Although we boast our Winter fun looks bright,
And foolishly are glad to see it at its height;
Yet so much sooner comes the long and gloomy night. Swift.

FOOLISHNESS. n. f. [from foolish.]
1. Folly; want of understanding.

2. Foolish practice; actual deviation from the right.
Foolishness being properly a man's deviation from right reason, in point of practice, must needs consist in his pitching upon such an end as is unsuitable to his condition, or pitching upon means unsuitable to the compassing of his end. South.

Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquire,
And shape my foolishness to their desire. Prior.

FOOLSTONES. n. f. A plant.
The characters are: it hath an anomalous flower, consisting of six dissimilar leaves; the five uppermost of which are so disposed as to imitate in some manner a helmet. Miller.

FOOT. n. f. plural feet. [poet, Saxon; voet, Dutch; pes, Scottish.]

1. The part upon which we stand.
The queen that bore thee,
Off'n'er upon her knees than on her feet,
Died ev'ry day she liv'd. Shaksp. Macbeth.

His affection to the church was so notorious, that he never deferred it till both it and he were over-run and trod under foot. Clarendon.

2. That by which any thing is supported in the nature of a foot.
3. The lower part; the base.

Xond' towers, whose wanton tops do burs the clouds,
Must kiss their own feet. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.

Freting, by little and little, washes away and cuts out both the tops and sides and feet of mountains. Hakewill on Provid.

4. The end; the lower part.
What dismal cries are those?
—Nothing; a trifling sum of misery,
New added to the foot of thy account:
Thy wife is seiz'd by force, and born away. Dryd. Cleomen.

5. The act of walking.
Antiochus departed, weening in his pride to make the land navigable, and the sea passable by foot. 2 Mac. v. 21.

6. On foot. Walking; without carriage.
Israel journeyed about six hundred thousand on foot. Ex. xii.

7. A posture of action.
The centurions and their charges distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

8. Infantry; footmen in arms. In this sense it has no plural.
Lucas gathered threecore thousand choice men of feet, and five thousand horsemen. 2 Mac. iv. 28.

Himself with all his foot entered the town, his horse being quartered about it. Clarendon, b. viii.

Thrice horse and foot about the fires are led,
And thrice with loud laments they wail the dead. Dryden.

9. State; character; condition.
See on what foot we stand; a scanty shore,
The sea behind, our enemies before. Dryden's Æn.

In specifying the word Ireland, it would seem to insinuate that we are not upon the same foot with our fellow subjects in England. Swift's Drapier's Letters.

What colour of excuse can be for the contempt with which we treat this part of our species, that we should not put them upon the common foot of humanity, that we should only set an insignificant fine upon the man who murders them? Addis.

10. Scheme; plan; settlement.
There is no wellwisher to his country without a little hope, that in time the kingdom may be on a better foot. Swift.

I ask, whether upon the foot of our constitution, as it stood in the reign of the late king James, a king of England may be deposed? Swift.

11. A state of incipient existence.
If such a tradition were at any time set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult how it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson's Sermons.

12. It seems to have been once proverbially used for the level, the square, par.
Were it not for this easy borrowing upon interest, men's necessities would draw upon them a most sudden undoing, in that they would be forced to sell their means, be it lands or goods, far under foot. Bacon's Essays.

FOO

13. A certain number of syllables constituting a distinct part of a verse.

Feet, in our English versifying, without quantity and joints;
be sure signs that the verse is either born deformed, unnatural, or lame. Afcham's Schoolmaster.

Didst thou hear these verses?
—O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some o' them had in them more feet than the verses would bear. Shaksp. King Lear.

14. Motion; action.
While other jests are something rank on foot,
Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with slender to marry. Shaksp. Mer. Wives of Windsor.

In the government of the world the number and variety of the ends on foot, with the secret nature of most things to which they relate, must make a distinct remark of their congruity, in some cases very difficult, and in some unattainable. Grew.

15. A measure containing twelve inches.
When it signifies measure it has often, but vitiously, foot in the plural.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linnen cloth, being buried for a fortnight's space four foot deep within the earth, came forth no ways mouldy or rotten. Bacon.

16. Step.
This man's son would, every foot and anon, be taking some of his companions into the orchard. L'Estrange.

TO FOOT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance; to tread wantonly; to trip.
Lonely the vale and full of horror flood;
Brown with the shade of a religious wood;
The moon was up, and shot a gleamy light;
He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
That fealty seem'd to skim the ground. Dryden.

2. To walk; not ride; not fly.
By this the dreadful beast drew nigh to land,
Half flying, and half footing in his haste. Fairy Queen.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night. Sh.
The man set the boy upon the ass, and footed it himself. L'Estrange.

With them a man sometimes cannot be a penitent, unless he also turns vagabond, and foots it to Jerusalem; or wanders over this or that part of the world, to visit the shrine of such or such a pretended saint. South.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try, for once, who can foot it farthest. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

TO FOOT. v. a.

1. To spurn; to kick.
You, that did void your rheum upon my beard, and foot me as you spurn a stranger cur over your threshold. Shaksp. King Lear.

2. To settle; to begin to fix.
What confederacy have you with the traitors
Late footed in the kingdom? Shaksp. King Lear.

3. To tread.
Saint Withold footed thrice the world:
He met the night-mare, and her name told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right. Shak. K. Lear.

There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,
Or shepherd boy, they fealty foot the green. Tickell.

FOOTBALL. n. f. [foot and ball.] A ball commonly made of a blown bladder cased with leather, driven by the foot.

Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spurn me thus? Shaksp. King Lear.

Such a Winter-piece should be beautified with all manner of works and exercises of Winter; as footballs, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice. Peacham.

As when a sort of lusty shepherds try
Their force at football, care of victory
Makes them salute so rudely, breast to breast,
That their encounter seems too rough for jest. Waller.

One rolls along a football to his foes,
One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryden.

He was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise. Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scribl.

FOOTBOY. n. f. [foot and boy.] A low menial; an attendant in livery.

Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This honest man, wait like a lowly footboy
At chamber-door? Shaksp. Henry VIII.

Though I had no body to assist but a footboy, yet I made shift to try a pretty number of things. Boyle on Colours.

Whenever he imagines advantage will redound to one of his footboys by oppression of me, he never disputes it. Swift.

FOOTBRIDGE. n. f. [foot and bridge.] A bridge on which passengers walk; a narrow bridge.

Palemon's shepherd, fearing the footbridge was not strong enough, loaded it so long, till he broke that which would have born a bigger burden. Sidney.

FOOTCLOATH. n. f. [foot and cloath.] A sumpter cloath.
Three

FOO

Three times to-day my foot-leath horse did stumble,
And started when he look'd upon the Tower,
As loth to bear me to the slaughterhouse. Shaksp. Rich. III.
FOOTED. adj. [from foot.] Shaped in the foot.
Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat. Greuv.
FOOTFIGHT. n. f. [from foot and fight.] A fight made on foot, in opposition to that on horseback.
So began our footfight in such sort, that we were well entered to blood of both sides. Sidney, b. ii.
FOOTHOLD. n. f. [from foot and hold.] Space to hold the foot; space on which one may tread surely.
So they all fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it to little foothold, that the first blast of wind laid it flat upon the ground. L'Estrange.
He's never well 'till he's at the top: he has nothing above him to aspire to, nor any foothold left him to come down by.
L'Estrange, Table 6.

FOOTING. n. f. [from foot.]

1. Ground for the foot.

I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and adventurous spirit
As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,
On the unfeeling footing of a spear. Shaksp. Henry IV.
As Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew the footing found, for all the flood. Davies.
In ascents, every step gained is a footing and help to the next. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Foundation; basis; support; root.

Cloven flukes; and, wondrous to behold,
Their sharpen'd ends in earth their footing place,
And the dry poles produce a living race. Dr. d. Virg. Georg.
All those sublime thoughts take their rise and footing here:
the mind first not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered. Locke.
The reasoning faculties of the soul would not know how to move, for want of a foundation and footing in most men, who cannot trace truth to its fountain and original. Locke.

3. Place.

Whether they unctuous exhalations are,
Fir'd by the sun, or seeming so alone;
Or each some more remote and slippery star,
Which loses footing when to mortals shewn. Dryden.
Tread; walk.
I would outnight you did no body come:
But hark, I hear the footing of a man. Shak. Merch. of Ven.
Break off, break off; I feel the different found
Of some chafte footing near about this ground:
Run to your throuds, within these brakes and trees;
Our number may affright. Milton.

4. Dance.

Make holiday: your rye-straw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one In country footing. Shaksp. King Lear.
Steps; road; track.
He grew strong among the Irish; and in his footing his son continuing, hath increased his said name. Spenser on Ireland.
Like running we'ds, that have no certain root; or like footings up and down, impossible to be traced. Bacon's H. VII.

5. Entrance; beginning; establishment.

Ever since our nation had any footing in this land, the state of England did desire to perfect the conquest. Davies.
The defeat of colonel Bellasis gave them their first footing in Yorkshire. Clarendon, b. viii.
No useful arts have yet found footing here;
But all untaught and savage does appear. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

6. State; condition; settlement.

Gaul was on the same footing with Egypt, as to taxes. Arb.
FOOTLICKER. n. f. [from foot and lick.] A slave; an humble fawner; one who licks the foot.
Do that good mischief which may make this island
Thine own for ever; and I, thy Caliban, Thine own footlicker. Shaksp. King Lear.

7. Footman.

The numbers levied by her lieutenant did consist of footmen three millions, of horsemen one million. Raleigh's History.
A low menial servant in livery.
He was carried in a rich chariot, litterwise, with two horses at either end, and two footmen on each side. Bacon.
Like footmen running before coaches.
To tell the inn what lord approaches. Prior.

8. One who practices to walk or run.

FOOTMANSHIP. n. f. [from footman.] The art or faculty of a runner.
The Irish archers espying this, suddenly broke up, and committed the safety of their lives to their nimble footmanship. Hayward.

9. Footpace.

Yet, says the fox, I have baffled more of them with my wiles and shifts than ever you did with your footmanship. L'Estr.
FOOTPACE. n. f. [from foot and pace.]

1. Part of a pair of stairs, whereon, after four or five steps, you arrive to a broad place, where you make two or three paces before you ascend another step, thereby to ease the legs in ascending the rest of the stairs. Mason's Mech. Exercises.

FOP

2. A pace no faster than a slow walk.
FOPPAD. n. f. [from foot and pad.] A highwayman that robs on foot, not on horseback.
FOPPATH. n. f. [from foot and path.] A narrow way which will not admit horses or carriages.
Know't thou the way to Dover?
—Both stile and gate, horseway and foppath. Shak. K. Lear.
FOPPOST. n. f. [from foot and post.] A post or messenger that travels on foot.
For carrying such letters, every thoroughfare weekly ap-pointeth a foppost, whose dispatch is well near as speedy as the horses. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

FOPSTALL. n. f. [from foot and stall.] A woman's stirrup.
FOPSTEP. n. f. [from foot and step.]

1. Trace; track; impression left by the foot.

Clear-lighted reason wisdom's judgment leads,
And sense, her vassal, in her foppsteps treads. Denham.
A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, where ever he has the fopsteps of others to follow. Locke.

2. Token; mark; notice given.

Let us turn our thoughts to the frame of our system, if there we may trace any visible foppsteps of Divine Wisdom and Benevolence. Bentley's Sermon.

3. Example.

FOPSTOOL. n. f. [from foot and stool.] Stool on which he that sits places his feet.

Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our foppstool of security. Shaksp. Henry VI.
They whose sacred office 'tis to bring
Kings to obey their God, and men their kings,
By these mysterious links to fix and tie
Men to the foppstool of the Deity. Denham's Sophy.
Let echoing anthems make his praises known
On earth, his foppstool, as in heav'n his throne. Roscommon.

By the phrase of worshipping his foppstool, no more is meant than worshipping God at his foppstool. Stillingfleet.

FOP. n. f. [A word probably made by chance, and therefore without etymology.] A foppishness; a coxcomb; a man of small understanding and much ostentation; a pretender; a man fond of show, dress, and flattery; an impertinent.

A whole tribe of fops. Shaksp. King Lear.

Got 'twixt asleep and wake. Shaksp. King Lear.

When such a positive abandon'd fop,
Among his numerous absurdities,
Stumbles upon some tolerable line,
I fret to see them in such company. Roscommon.

The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat. L'Estrange.

In a dull stream, which moving slow,
You hardly see the current flow;
When a small breeze obstructs the course,
It whirls about for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers
Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers:
The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;
Thus whirling round, together draws Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws. Swift.

FOPDIDDLE. n. f. [from fop and diddle.] A fool; an insignificant wretch.

Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle,
And handled you like a fopdiddle. Hudibras, p. ii.

FOPPERY. n. f. [from fop.]

1. Folly; impertinence.

Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter
My sober house. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guilefulness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters the fun, the moon and stars, as if we were villains on necessity. Shaksp. King Lear.

2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.

My open'd thought to joyous prospect rais'd,
And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise. Prior.

Which best or worst, you could not think;
And die you must, for want of drink. Prior.

It is a most infamous scandal upon the nation, to reproach them for treating foreigners with contempt. Swift.

We can only give them that liberty now for something, which they have so many years exercised for nothing, of railing and scribbling against us. Swift.

Your sermons would be less valuable, for want of time. Swift.

2. With respect to; with regard to.

When tyrant Nero burnt th' imperial town,
Shriek'd for the downfall in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die. Dryden.

Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault, find a refuge in the caresses of foolish flatterers. Locke.

A found mind in a found body is a short but full description of a happy state in this world: he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but little the better for any thing else. Locke.

The middle of the gulph is remarkable for tempests. Addis.

My open'd thought to joyous prospect rais'd,
And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise. Prior.

FOR

Fools ne'er had less grace in a year;
For wife men are grown foppish,
And know not how their wits to wear,
Their manners are so apish. Shaksp. King Lear.
2. Vain in show; foolishly ostentatious; vain of dress.
With him the present still some virtues have;
The vain are sprightly, and the stupid grave;
The slothful negligent, the foppish neat;
The lewd are airy, and the shy discreet. Garth's Dispensat.
The Romans grew extremely expensive and foppish in this article; so that the emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women. Arbuth.
FOPFISHLY. adv. [from foppish.] Vainly; ostentatiously.
FOPFISHNESS. n. f. [from foppish.] Vanity; showy or osten-

And, with his tailor, share the fopping's heart. Tickell.

FOR. prep. [from for, Saxon; vor, Dutch.]

1. Because of.

That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God for the worthiness of his son would not withstanding vouchsafe to grant. Hooker, b. v. f. 47.

Edward and Richard,
With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,
Are at our backs. Shaksp. Henry VI. p. iii.

Speak, good Cominius;

Leave nothing out for length.

For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of, I will search into a tradition concerning his travels. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

An astrologer faith, if it were not for two things that are constant, no individual would last one moment. Bacon.

For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon Christendom for the propagation of their laws; and so the Christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention. Bacon's War with Spain.

The governor, falling out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for haste left behind them. Knuttel's History of the Turks.

Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victual. Knuttel.

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,
This cannot take her:

If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her. Suckling.

Care not for frowns or smiles. Denham's Sophy, Prod.

The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wickedest for hoping. Hammond's Pract. Catech.

Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains; but quietly recommend his estate to God;
and leave the success to him. Taylor.

Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, wore them so low that the inward nerve lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them. Ray on the Creation.

I but revenge my fate; disdain'd, betray'd,
And suff'ring death for this ungrateful maid. Dryden.

Sole on the barren sands, the suff'ring chief Roar'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief. Dryden.

For his long absence church and state did groan,
Madness the pulpit, faction seiz'd the throne. Dryden.

Nor with a superstitious fear is aw'd
For what befalls at home, or what abroad. Dryd. Virg. Geo.

I, my own judge, condemn'd myself before;
For pity, aggravate my crime no more. Dryden's Aurengz.

Matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burnt th' imperial town,
Shriek'd for the downfall in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die. Dryden.

28. In hope of; for the sake of; noting the final cause.
How quickly nature
Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish, over-careful fathers,
Have broke their sleeps with thoughts, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry: for this, engross'd
The canker'd heaps of strong atchieved gold:
For this they have been thoughtful to invest Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shakef. H. IV.
The kingdom of God was first rent by ill counsel; upon

FOR

- which counsel there are set, for our instruction, two marks.
Bacon.
- For he writes not for money, nor for praise,
Nor to be call'd a wit, nor to wear bays. Denham.

be a contrivance to fright us. Swift's Drapier's Letter.
If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system. Bentley.

FOR

35. For all. Notwithstanding.
Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing I desire more than fully to prove myself a man in this enterprise. Sidney.
For all the carefulness of the Christians the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up. Kneller's History.
But as Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did show the footing ground for all the flood. Davies.
They resolute, for all this, do proceed Unto that judgment. Daniel.
For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition. South.
If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperor of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home. Stillingfleet.
I thought that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will, for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account. Boyle on Colours.
She might have pass'd over all such petty business; but the raising of my rable is not to be mumbled up in silence, for all her pertness. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
36. To the use of; to be used in.
The oak for nothing ill,
The osier good for twigs, the poplar for the mill. Spenser.
In consequence of.
For love they force through thickets of the wood,
They climb the steepy hills and stem the flood. Dryden.
37. In recompense of.
Now, for so many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Cesar's health;
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators. Dryden's Pers.
First the wily wizard must be caught;
For unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught. Dryd. Virg.
39. In proportion to.
He is not very tall, yet for his years he's tall. Shakespeare.
Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!
Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;
Too noble for revenge. Dryden's Juven. Sat. 13.
40. By means of; by interposition of.
Moral consideration can no way move the sensible appetite, were it not for the will. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone; and what would men do in such a case, if it were not for God? Tillotson's Sermons.
41. In regard of; in preservation of. I cannot for my life, is, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.
I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;
But could not get him for my heart. Shakespeare.
I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pasted upon the walls. Addison's Spect.
42. For to. In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before to the sign of the infinitive mood, to note the final cause. As, I come for to see you, for I love to see you: in the same sense with the French pour. Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous, is now always omitted.
Who shall let me now
On this vile body for to wreak my wrong? Fairy Queen.
A large posterity
Up to your happy palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints for to increase the count. Spenser.
These things may serve for to represent how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain. Bacon.
- FOR, conj.
1. The word by which the reason is given of something advanced before.
Heavy's doth with us as we with torches deal,
Not light them for ourselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Shakef. Measure for Measure.
Old husbandmen I at Sabinaum know,
Who for another year dig, plough, and sow;
For never any man was yet so old,
But hop'd his life one Winter more would hold. Denham.
Tell me what kind of thing is wit?
For the first matter loves variety less. Cowley.
Thus does he who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living hand. Tillotson.
2. Because; on this account that.
I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would with them chosen by discretion of wise men. Spenser on Ireland.
Jealous souls will not be answer'd so:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they're jealous. Shakespeare's Othello.
Heaven defend your good souls, that you think

FOR

- I will your serious and great business scant;
For she is with me. Shakespeare's Othello.
Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame. Fairfax.
Many excrescences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance. Bacon's Natural History.
3. For as much. In regard that; in consideration of.
For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to confider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest overquick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of. Hooker, b. v.
For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water. Arbutnot on Diet.
4. For why. Because; for this reason that.
Solyman had three hundred fieldpieces, that a camel might well carry one of them, being taken from the carriage; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor unto battle, had brought no greater pieces of battery with him. Kneller.
To FORAGE, v. n. [from foris, abroad, Latin.]
1. To wander far; to rove at a distance.
Forage, and run
To meet disfigure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him, ere he come so nigh. Shak. K. John.
2. To wander in search of spoil, generally of provisions.
As in a stormy night,
Wolves, urged by their raging appetite,
Forage for prey. Denham.
There was a brood of young larks in the corn, and the dam went abroad forage for them. L'Estrange's Fables.
Nor dare they stray
When rain is promis'd, or a stormy day;
But near the city walls their wat'ring take,
Nor forage far, but short excursions make. Dryden's Virgil.
3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.
His most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp Forage in blood of French nobility. Shakespeare's Henry V.
To FORAGE, v. a. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.
They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy for forage and over-run the whole land. Spenser on Ireland.
FORAGE, n. f. [from forage, German and French, from foris,
Latin.]
1. Search of provisions; the act of feeding abroad.
One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,
Ewes, and their bleating lambs, over the plains
Their booty. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
2. Provisions sought abroad.
Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden's Georg.
3. Provisions in general.
Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd. Dryd. Fables.
FORAMINOUS, adj. [from foramen, Latin.] Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.
Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the found, will deaden it; but in the passage of the found they will admit it better than harder bodies. Bacon's Nat. History.
To FORBEAR, v. n. pret. I forbore, anciently forbare; part.
forborn. [from for, Saxon, for has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear; or depravation; as forswear, and other powers not easily explained.]
1. To cease from any thing; to intermit.
The wolf, the lion, and the bear,
When they their prey in pieces tear,
To quarrel with themselves forbear. Denham.
2. To pause; to delay.
I pray you, tarry: pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrongs,
I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shakespeare.
3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.
He forbare to go forth. 1 Sa. xxiii. 13.
At this he started, and forbare to swear;
Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear. Dryden's Juven.
Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance. Cheyne.
By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone. Prov. xxv. 15.
To FORBEAR, v. a.
1. To decline; to omit voluntarily.
Forbear his preference, until time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure. Shakespeare's King Lear.
So angry bulls the combat do forbear,
When from the wood a lion does appear. Waller.
2. To abstain from; to shun to do.

FOR

If it passed only by the house of peers, it should be looked upon as invalid and void, and execution should be thereupon forborn or suspended. Clarendon, b. viii.

There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it. South's Sermons.

3. To spare; to treat with clemency.

With all lowliness and meekness, with long sufferings, forbearing one another in love. Eph. iv. 2.

4. To withhold.

Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not. 2 Chro. xxxv. 21.

FORBEARANCE. n. f. [from forbear.]

1. The care of avoiding or shunning any thing; negation of practice.

True nobleness would Learn him forbearance from to foul a wrong. Shakesp. R. III.

This may convince us how vastly greater a pleasure is consequent upon the forbearance of sin, than can possibly accompany the commission of it. South's Sermons.

Liberty is the power a man has to do, or forbear doing, any particular action, according as its doing or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind. Locke.

2. Intermission of something.

3. Command of temper.

Have a continent forbearance, 'till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. Lenity; delay of punishment; mildness.

Nor do I take notice of this instance of severity in our own country to justify such a proceeding, but only to display the mildness and forbearance made use of under the reign of his present majesty. Addison's Freeholder, No. 52.

He applies to our gratitude by obligations of kindness and beneficence, of long suffering and forbearance. Rogers.

FORBEARER. n. f. [from forbear.] An intermitter; inter-ceptor of any thing.

The West as a father all goodness doth bring,

The East a forbearer, no manner of thing. Tufts's Hymnody.

TO FORBID. v. a. pret. I forbade; part. forbidden or forbid.

[forbeban, Saxon; verbieden, Dutch.]

1. To prohibit; to interdict any thing.

A witch, a quean, an old cozening quean; have I not forbid her my house? Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,

Where they fought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.

The voice of reason, in all the dictates of natural morality, ought carefully to be attended to, by a strict observance of what it commands, but especially of what it forbids. South.

All hatred of persons, by very many Christian principles, we are most solemnly and indispensably forbid. Spratt's Sermon.

The chaste and holy race

Are all forbidden this pollute place. Dryden's Æn. b. vi.

2. To command to forbear any thing.

She with so sweet a rigour forbad him, that he durst not rebel. Sidney, b. ii.

It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand,

The practice and the purpose of the king,

From whose obedience I forbid my soul. Shakespeare.

They have determined to consume all those things that God hath forbidden them to eat by his laws. Judith xi. 12.

3. To oppose; to hinder.

The moisture being forbidden to come up in the plant, stayeth longer in the root, and so dilate it. Bacon's Nat. History.

The plaster alone would pen the humour, and so exasperate it as well as forbid new humour. Bacon's Natural History.

A blaze of glory that forbids the light!

O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,

And fear no farther than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

4. To accuse; to blast. Now obsolete. To bid is in old language to pray; to forbid therefore is to curse.

Sleep shall neither night nor day

Hang upon his penthouse lid;

He shall live a man forbid. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO FORBID. v. n. To utter a prohibition.

Now the good gods forbid,

That our renowned Rome

Should now eat up her own! Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

FORBIDDANCE. n. f. [from forbid.] Prohibition; edict against any thing.

How hast thou yielded to transgress

The strict forbiddance! how to violate

The sacred fruit forbidden! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

FORBIDDENLY. adv. [from forbid.] In an unlawful manner.

With all confidence he swears, as he had seen't,

That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly. Shakespeare.

FORBIDDER. n. f. [from forbid.] One that prohibits; one that enacts a prohibition.

This was a bold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the forbidder of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited. Brown's Vul. Err.

Other care, perhaps,

FOR

May have diverted from continual watch

Our great forbidder! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

FORBIDDING. participial adj. [from forbid.] Raising abhorrence; repelling approach; causing aversion.

Tragedy was made forbidding and horrible. A. Hill.

FORCE. n. f. [force, French; fortis, Latin.]

1. Strength; vigour; might; active power.

He never could maintain his part but in the force of his will. Shakesp. Much Ado about Nothing.

A ship, which hath struck fail, doth run

By force of that force which before it won. Dante.

2. Violence.

Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown,

Which now they hold by force, and not by right. Sh. H. VI.

The shepherd Paris bore the Spartan bride

By force away, and then by force enjoy'd; Dryden.

3. Virtue; efficacy.

Manifest it is, that the very majesty and holiness of the place where God is worshipped, hath, in regard of us, great virtue, force and efficacy; for that it serveth as a sensible help to stir up devotion. Hooker, b. v. f. 16.

No definitions, no suppositions of any fact, are of force enough to destroy constant experience. Locke.

4. Validness; power of law.

A testament is of force after men are dead. Heb. ix. 17.

Not long in force this charter stood;

Wanting that seal, it must be seal'd in blood. Denham.

5. Armament; warlike preparation. Often forces in the plural.

O Thou! whose captain I account myself,

Look on my forces with a gracious eye. Shakesp. Richard III.

The secret of the power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations. Bacon.

A greater force than that which here we find,

N'er press'd the ocean, nor employ'd the wind. Waller.

Those victorious forces of the rebels were not able to sustain your arms. Dryden.

6. Destiny; necessity; fatal compulsion.

TO FORCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compel; to constrain.

Dangers are light, if they once seem light; and more dangers have deceived men than forced them. Bacon.

I have been forced to use the cant words of Whig and Tory. Swift's Examiner.

The actions and operations did force them upon dividing the single idea. Pope's View of Epick Poem.

2. To overpower by strength.

O that fortune

Had brought me to the field where thou art fam'd

To have wrought such wonders with an ass's jaw,

I should have forc'd thee soon with other arms. Milton.

With fates averse, the rout in arms reformed,

To force their monarch and insult the court. Dryden's Æn.

3. To impel; to press.

Thou shalt not destroy the trees by forcing an ax against them. Deutr. 20. 19.

4. To draw or push by main strength.

Stooping, the spear descend'd on his chine,

Just where the bone distinguish'd either loin:

It stuck so fast, so deeply bury'd lay,

That scarce the victor forc'd the steel away. Dryden's Æn.

5. To enforce; to urge.

Three bluffing nights, born by the southern blast,

I floated, and discover'd land at last:

High on a mounting wave my head I bore,

Forcing my strength, and gathering to the shore. Dryd. Æn.

6. To drive by violence or power.

This way of flattering their willing benefactors out of parts, contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Deacy of Piety.

To free the ports, and ope the Punique land

To Trojan guests; left, ignorant of fate,

The queen might force them from her town and state. Dryd.

7. To gain by violence or power.

My heart was your's; but, oh! you left it here

Abandon'd to those tyrants hope and fear:

If they forc'd from me one kind look or word,

Could you not that, nor that small part afford? Dryden.

8. To form; to take or enter by violence.

Troy wall'd so high,

Atreides might as well have forc'd the sky. Waller.

Heav'n from all ages wisely did provide

This wealth, and for the bravest nation hide;

Who with four hundred foot, and forty horse,

Dare boldly go a new-found world to force. Dryd. Ind. Emp.

9. To ravish; to violate by force.

Force her.—I like it not. Dryden.

10. To constrain; to distort; not to obtain naturally or with ease.

Our general taste in England is for epigram, turns of wit, and forced conceits. Addison's Spectator, No. 409.

11. To man; to strengthen by soldiers; to garrison. Here

FOR

Here let them lye,

'Till famine and the ague eat them up:

Were they not forc'd with those that should be our's,

We might have met them darest, beard to beard. Shakesp.

If you find that any great number of soldiers be newly sent into Oronoque, and that the passages be already forced,

then be well advised how you land. Raleigh's Apology.

1. To FORCE out. To extort.

The tricks used in convening synods might force out an expression from him, that did not carry all the respect due to those great names. Atterbury.

The heat of the dispute had forced out from him expressions that seemed to make his doctrine run higher than really it did. Atterbury.

TO FORCE. v. n. To lay stress upon. This word I have only found in the following passage.

That morning that he was to join battle with Harold, his armor put on his backpiece before, and his breastplate behind; the which being essay'd by some that stood by, was taken among them for an ill token, and therefore advised him not to fight that day; to whom the duke answered, I force not of such fooleries; but if I have any skill in footfaying, as in foot I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change copy from a duke to a king. Cand. n's Remains.

FORCEFULLY. adv. [from force.] Violently; constrainedly; unaturally.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters doth most aptly agree to that structure of the abyss and antediluvian earth; but very improperly and forc'dly to the present form of the earth and the waters. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

FORCEFUL. adj. [force and full.] Violent; strong; driven with great might; impetuous.

Why, what need we

Commune with you of this, but rather follow

Our forceful indignation? Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Against the speed he threw

His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,

Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden's Æn.

Were it by chance, or forceful destiny,

Which forms in causes first what'er shall be,

Afflicted by a friend, one moonless night,

This Palamon from prison took his flight. Dryden.

He pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent,

Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went. Pope.

FORCEFULLY. adv. [from forceful.] Violently; impetuously.

FORCELESS. adj. [from force.] Without force; weak; feeble; impotent.

FORCEPS. n. f. [Latin.]

Forceps properly signifies a pair of tongs; but is used for an instrument in chirurgery, to extract any thing out of wounds, and the like occasions. Quincy.

FORCER. n. f. [from force.]

1. That which forces, drives, or constrains.

2. The embolus of a pump working by pulsion, in contradistinction to a sucker, which acts by attraction.

The usual means for the ascent of water is either by suckers or forcers. Wilkins's Deedalus.

FORCIBLE. adj. [from force.]

1. Strong; mighty; opposed to weak.

That punishment, which hath been sometimes forcible to bridle sin, may grow afterwards too weak and feeble. Hooker.

2. Violent; impetuous.

3. Efficacious; active; powerful.

Sweet smells are most forcible in dry substances, when broken; and so likewise in oranges, the ripping of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon's Natural History.

4. Prevalent; of great influence.

God hath assured us, that there is no inclination or temptation to forcible which our humble prayers and desires may not frustrate and break asunder. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Jersey, belov'd by all; for all must feel

The influence of a form and mind,

Where comely grace and constant virtue dwell,

Like mingl'd streams, more forcible when join'd:

Jersey shall at thy altars stand,

Shall there receive the azure band. Prior.

5. Done by force.

The abdication of king James, the advocates on that side look upon to have been forcible and unjust, and consequently void. Swift.

6. Valid; binding; obligatory.

FORCIBLENESS. n. f. [from forcible.] Force; violence.

FORCIBLY. adv. [from forcible.]

1. Strongly; powerfully.

The Gospel offers such considerations as are fit to work very forcibly upon two of the most swaying and governing passions in the mind, our hopes and our fears. Tillotson.

2. Impetuously.

3. By violence; by force.

He himself with greedy great desire

Into the cattle enter'd forcibly. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 8.

FOR

The taking and carrying away of women forcibly, and against their will, except female wards and bondwomen, was made capital. Bacon's Henry VII.

This doctrine brings us down to the level of horse and mule, whose mouths are forcibly holden with bit and bridle. Hamm.

FORCIPATED. adj. [from forceps.] Formed like a pair of pincers to open and inclose.

The locusts have antennæ, or long horns before, with a long falcation or forcipated tail behind. Brown's Vulgar Err.

When they have seized their prey, they will so tenaciously hold it with their forcipated mouth, that they will not part therewith, even when taken out of the waters. Derham.

FORD. n. f. [from for, Saxon, from ford, to pass.]

1. A shallow part of a river when it may be passed without swimming.

Her men the paths rode through made by her sword;

They pass the stream, when she had found the ford. Fairfax.

2. It sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness.

Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards

The ford, and of itself the water flies

All taste of living wight. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Rife, wretched widow! rife; nor undeplor'd

FOR

To FORECAST. v. n. To form schemes; to contrive beforehand.

And whatso heavens in their secret doom
Ordained have, how can frail fleshy wight
Forecast, but it must needs to issue come? Spenser.
When broad awake, the finds in troublous fit,
Forecasting how his foe he might annoy. Fairy Queen, b. i.
FORECAST. n. f. [from the verb.] Contrivance beforehand; scheme; plan; antecedent policy.

Alas! that Warwick had no more forecast,
But while he thought to steal the fingle ten,
The king was silly finger'd from the deck! Shak. Hen. VI.
He makes this difference to arise from the forecast and pre-determination of the gods. Addison on ancient Medals.

The last, scarce ripen'd into perfect man,
Saw helpless him from whom their life began:
Mem'ry and forecast just returns engage;
That pointed back to youth, this on to age. Pope.

FORECASTER. n. f. [from forecast.] One who contrives beforehand.

FORECASTLE. n. f. [fore and castle.] In a ship, is that part where the foremast stands, and is divided from the rest of the floor by a bulk-head: that part of the forecastle which is aloft, and not in the hold, is called the prow. Harris.

The commodity of the new cook-room the merchants have found to be so great, as that, in all their ships, the cook-rooms are built in their forecastles, contrary to that which had been anciently used. Raleigh's Essay.

FORECHOSEN. partic. [fore and chosen.] Pre-elected.

FORECITED. part. [fore and cite.] Quoted before, or above.

GRAVES is of opinion, that the alteration mentioned in that forfeited passage is continued. Arbutnot on Coins.

TO FORECLOSE. v. a. [fore and close.]

1. To shut up; to preclude; to prevent.

The embargo with Spain foreclosed this trade. Carew.

2. To FORECLOSE a Mortgage, is to cut off the power of redemption.

TO FOREDECK. n. f. [fore and deck.] The anterior part of the ship.

I to the foredeck went, and thence did look For rocky Scylla. Chapman's Odyssey, b. xii.

TO FOREDESIGN. v. a. [fore and design.] To plan beforehand.

All the steps of the growth and vegetation both of animals and plants, have been foreseen and foredesigned by the wife Author of nature. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

TO FOREDO. v. a. [from fore and do, not fore.]

1. To ruin; to destroy. A word obsolete. Opposed to making happy.

Befeeching him, if either falves or oils,
A foredone wight from door of death might raise,
He would at her request prolong her nephew's days. Fa. Qu.

That drew on men God's hatred and his wrath,
And many souls in dolours had foredone. Fairy Queen, b. i.

This doth betoken,
The corse they follow did with desperate hand
Foredo its own life. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

This is the night
That either makes me, or foredoes me quite. Shakespeare.

2. To overdo; to weary; to harass.

Whilst the heavy plowman moans,
All with weary talk foredone. Shakespeare.

TO FOREDOOM. v. a. [fore and doom.] To predestinate; to determine beforehand.

Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium, and the realms foredoom'd by Jove. Dryd. Æn.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease: if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state. Dryden.

Fate foredoom'd, and all things tend
By course of time to their appointed end. Dryden.

Here Britain's statemen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.

FOREEND. n. f. [fore and end.] The anterior part.

I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid
More pious debts to heaven than in all
The fore-end of my time. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

In the fore-end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm; and when the wife man had taken it into his boat, it opened of itself, and there were found in it a book and a letter. Bacon's New Atlantis.

FOREFATHER. n. f. [fore and father.] Ancestor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge. Hook.

If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor. Raleigh's History.

Conceit is still deriv'd
From some forefather grief; mine is not so. Shak. Rich. II.

FOR

Shall I not be distraught,
And madly play with my forefathers joints? Sh. Ro. and Jul.

Our great forefathers
Had left him nought to conquer but his country. Addison.

When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way. Addison on Italy.

Blest peer! his great forefathers ev'ry grace
Reflecting, and reflected in his race. Pope, Epist. i.

TO FOREFEIND. v. a. [fore and defend.]

1. To prohibit; to avert.

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No, heav'n's forefend! I would not kill thy soul. Shaksp.

Perhaps a fever, which the gods forefend,
May bring your youth to some untimely end. Dryden.

2. To provide for; to secure.

Down with the nose,
Down with it flat: take the bridge quite away
Of him, that, his particular to forefend, Smells from the gen'ral weal. Shaksp. Timon of Athens.

FOREFINGER. n. f. [fore and finger.] The finger next to the thumb; the index.

An agate-fstone
On the forefinger of an alderman. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

Polymnia shall be drawn, as it were, acting her speech with her forefinger. Peacocks on Drawing.

Some wear this on the middlefinger, as the ancient Gauls and Britons; and some upon the forefinger. Brown's Vul. Err.

FOREFOOT. n. f. plur. forefeet. [fore and foot.] The anterior foot of a quadruped: in contempt, a hand.

Give me thy fist, thy forefoot to me give. Shak. Hen. V.

He ran fiercely, and smote at Heliodorus with his forefoot. 2 Mac. iii. 25.

I continue my line from thence to the heel; then making the breast with the eminency thereof, bring out his near forefoot, which I finish. Peacocks on Drawing.

TO FOREGO. v. a. [for and go.]

1. To quit; to give up; to resign.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humble foe?

If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will may forego. Spenser, Sen. 4. v.

Having all before absolutely in his power, it remaineth so still, he having already neither foregiven nor foregone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them. Spenser's State of Ireland.

He is a great adventurer, said he,
That hath his sword through hard assay foregone;
And now hath vowed, till he avenged be
Of that despite, never to wear none. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to leave one for another's sake, to forego meaner for the attainment of higher degrees. Hooker, b. v.

Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a matter? Shaksp. H. VIII.

Let us not forego
That for a trifle which was bought with blood. Shakespeare.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods forlorn! Milt. Pa. Left.

This argument might prevail with you to forego a little of your repose for the publick benefit. Dryd. Jew. Dedie.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another; and therefore they see nothing in it, for which they should forego a present enjoyment. Locke.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]

By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults: O! then we thought them not. Shak.

It is to be understood of Cain, that many years foregone, and when his people were increased, he built the city of Enoch. Raleigh's History of the World.

Left what has been said of the differences between true and apparent colours be interpreted in too unlimited a sense, reflect upon the two foregoing objections. Boyle on Colours.

This foregoing remark gives the reason why imitation pleases. Dryden's Dunciad.

I was seated in my elbow-chair, where I had indulged the foregoing speculations, with my lamp burning by me as usual.
Addison's Spectator, N° 463.

In the foregoing part of this work I promised further proofs.
Woodward's Natural History.

3. To lose.

This is the very ecstacy of love,
Whose violent property foregoes itself,
And leads the will to desperate undertakings. Shak. Hamlet.

FOREGOER. n. f. [from foregoing.] Ancestor; progenitor.

Honours best thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive
Than our foregoers. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.

FOREGROUND. n. f. [fore and ground.] The part of the field or expanse of a picture which seems to lie before the figures.

All agree that white can subside on the foreground of the picture: the question therefore is to know, if it can equally be placed upon that which is backward, the light being universal, and the figures supposed in an open field. Dryden.

FOREHAND. n. f. [fore and hand.]

1. The part of a horse which is before the rider.

2. The chief part.

The great Achilles, whom opinion crowns
The finew and the forehead of our host. Shakespeare.

FOREHAND. adj. A thing done too soon.

You'll say the did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the forehead sin. Shakespeare.

FOREHAND. n. f. [from fore and hand.]

1. Early; timely.

If by thus doing you have not secured your time by an early and forehanded care, yet be sure, by a timely diligence, to redeem the time. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. Formed in the foreparts.

Bauble, do you call him? He's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely forehanded: mark but the cleanness of his shapen too.
Dryden's Don Sebastian.

FOREHEAD. n. f. [fore and head.]

1. That part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead, when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Some angel copy'd, while I slept, each grace,
And moulded ev'ry feature from my face:
Such majesty does from her forehead rise,
Her cheeks such blushes cast, such rays her eyes. Dryden.

2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity.

A man of confidence pretheth forward upon every appearance of advantage, and thinks nothing above his management or his merit: where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence: these men of forehead are magnificent in promises, and infallible in their prescriptions. Collier.

I would fain know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply. Swift's Presbyterian Plea.

FOREHOLDING. n. f. [fore and hold.] Predictions; ominous accounts; superstitious prognostications.

How are superstitious men hagg'd out of their wits with the fancy of omens, forebodings, and old wives tales! L'Estr.

FOREIGN. adj. [foreign, French; forane, Spanish, from foris,
Latin.]

1. Not of this country; not domestic.

Your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home. Shaksp. Rich. III.

The learned correspondence you hold in foreign parts. Milt.

The positions are so far from being new, that they are commonly to be met with in both ancient and modern, domesttick and foreign writers. Atterbury's Sermon, Pref.

The parties and divisions among us may several ways bring destruction upon our country, at the same time that our united force would secure us against all the attempts of a foreign enemy. Addison's Freeholder, N° 34.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation.
It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart. Addison's Cato.

Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition. Addis.

This design is not foreign from some people's thoughts.
Swift on the Sacramental Test.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.

They will not flick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still, which he griev'd him,
That he ran mad and died. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

4. [In law.] A foreign plea, placitum forinsecum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.

There are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold in their ill-natur'd land Induce. Phillips.

FOREIGNER. n. f. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,
So mere a stranger to my thoughts, I know
Not how to entertain him. Denham's Sophy.

To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong a friend, a kinsman, and a son:
Refuse your ancient care. Dryd. Æn.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch;
but the lemons, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs, are all foreigners. Addison's Freeholder.

hand; to be prepossessed.

TO FOREKNOW. v. a. [fore and know.] To have precience of; to foresee.

We foreknew that the sun will rise and set, that all men born in the world shall die again; that after Winter the Spring shall come; after the Spring, Summer and harvest; yet is not our foreknowledge the cause of any of those. Raleigh.

He foreknew John should not suffer a violent death, but go into his grave in peace. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vii. c. 10.

Calchas the sacred seer, who had in view
Things present and the past, and things to come foreknew.
Dryden's Iliad.

Who would the miseries of man foreknow?
Not knowing, we but share our part of woe. Dryden.

FOREKNOWABLE. adj. [from foreknow.] Possible to be known

 The first of them could things to come foresee;
 The next, could of things present best advise;
 The third, things past could keep in memory. Fairy Queen.
 If there be any thing foreseen that is not usual, be armed for it by any hearty though a short prayer, and an earnest resolution beforehand, and then watch when it comes. Taylor.
 At h's foreseen approach, already quake
 The Caspian kingdoms and Meotian lake:
 Their seers behold the tempest from afar,
 And threatening oracles denounce the war. Dryden's Æn.
TO FORESHAME. v. a. [for and shame.] To shame; to bring reproach upon.
 Oh bill, foreshaming
 Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie
 Without a monument. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

 A thousand

FOR

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!
 No other obligation?
 That promises more thousands: honour's train
 Is longer than his foreskirt. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
TO FORESLACK. v. a. [fore and slack.] To neglect by idleness.
 It is a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion foreslack'd, that might have been the eternal good of the land. Stenfor's State of Ireland.
TO FORESLAW. v. a. [fore and slaw.]
 1. To delay; to hinder; to impede; to obstruct.
 No stream, no wood, no mountain could foreslaw
 Their happy pace. Fairfax, b. i.
 Now the illustrious triumph return'd again,
 Brings every grace triumphphant in her train:
 The wond'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm,
Foreslaw'd her passage, to behold her form. Dryden.
 2. To neglect; to omit.
 When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it flood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreslaving, but wisdom in chusing his time, resolv'd with speed to assail them. Bacon's Hen. VII.
 Chremes, how many fishers do you know
 That rule their boats and use their nets aright,
 That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreslaw?
 Some such have been: but, ah! by tempests spite
 Their boats are lost; while we may fit and moan
 That few were such, and now these few are none. P. Fletcher.
TO FORESLAW. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.
 This may plant courage in their quailing breasts,
 For yet is hope of life and victory;
Foreslaw no longer, make we hence again. Shakespeare, Henry VI.

 You shall find his vanities forespent,
 Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shakespeare, Henry V.
 3. Bestowed before.
 We must receive him
 According to the honour of his fender;
 And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
 We must extend our notice. Shakespeare.
FORESPELLER. n. f. [fore and spell.] One that rides before.
 A day in April never came so sweet,
 To show how costly Summer was at hand,
 As this forespeller comes before his lord. Shakespeare.
FOREST. n. f. [forest, French; foresta, Italian.]
 1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground, with wood.
 By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chuse but feed in continual danger of life. Hosker, b. v. f. 48.
 Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Dunsinane's high hill Shall come against him.
 —That will never be:
 Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
 Unfix his earth-bound root?
 There he sits which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champagnes, but grafting, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-shades, as in forests. Bacon's Natural History, N. 936.
 How the first forest rais'd its shady head. Recommen.
 2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king, for his pleasure; which territory of ground is bounded with irremovable marks, and replenished with beasts of venery and chase, and with great coverts of vert for their succour and abode: for the preservation of which place, vert, and venison, forests is this: the king sends out his commission, under the broad seal of England, directed to certain discreet persons, has a mind to afforest: which returned into Chancery, proclaims, that none shall hunt or chase any wild beasts within that precinct, without the king's special licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agillors, regarders, bailiffs, and beaules. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pypowders to a fair. Cowel.

TO FORESTALL. v. a. [fore and stall, Saxon.]
 1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.
 If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
 That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,
 And give men turns of speech: do not forestall

2. FORLORN Hope. The soldiers who are sent first to the attack, and are therefore doomed to perish.
 Critics in plumes,
 Who telling on our foremost benches sit,
 And still charge first, the true forloren of wit. Dryden.
FORLORNNESS, n.f. [from forloren.] Destitution; misery; solitude.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness; even whilst they completed the forlorenness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. Bogt.

FOR

 To FORLYE, v. n. [from for and lye.] To lye across.

Knit with a golden baldrick, which forlye
 Athwart her snowy breast, and did divide
 Her dainty paps, which, like young fruit in May,
 Now little 'gan to swell; and being ty'd,
 Through her thin weed, their places only signify'd. Fa. Qu.
FORM, n.f. [from forma, Latin; forme, French.]

1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.
 Nay, women are frail too.
 —Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
 Which are as easy broke as they make forma. Shakespeare.
 It flood still; but I could not discern the form thereof. Job.
 Gold will endure a vehement fire, without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form. Grew's Cosmol. Sac. b. i.

Matter, as wife logicians say,
 Cannot without a form subsist;
 And form, say I as well as they,
 Must fail, if matter brings no grit. Swift.
 2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.

When noble benefits shall prove
 Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
 Thy turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
 Than ever they were fair. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
 Here toils and death, and death's half-brother, sleep,
 Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep;
 With anxious pleasures of a guilty mind,
 Deep frauds before, and open force behind. Dryden's En.

3. Particular model or modification.
 He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms. Locke.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Adams.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance. Isa. liii. 2.

5. Regularity; method; order.
 What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little,
 Was not like madness. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.
 Then those whom form of laws
 Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.
 They were young heirs sent only for form from schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months in the year. Swift's Essay on Modern Education.

7. Ceremony; external rites.
 Though well we may not pass upon his life,
 Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r
 Shall do a courtly to our wrath, which men
 May blame, but not controul. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 A long table, and a square table, or seat about the walls, seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the councilors' opinions that sit lower. Bacon's Essay 21.
 That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caused a particular act to pass that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes. Davies in Ireland.
 Their general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their form. Clarendon, b. viii.
 How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?

Is it a compliment of form, or love? A. Phill. Disf. Math.

8. Stated method; established practice.
 He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all. Hapker, b. iii. f. 2.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flatter and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

Nor seek to know
 Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden's En.

9. A long seat.
 If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back. Watts's Logic.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the forms, and taken following her into the park. Shakl.

10. A class; a rank of students.
 It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have

FOR

have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden's Duffrey.

11. The seat or bed of a hare.
 Now for a clod-like hare in form they peer;
 Now bolt and cudgel quireless leap do move;
 Now the ambitious lark, with mirror clear,
 They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Sidan.
 Have you observ'd a fitting hare,
 Lift'nings, and fearful of the storm

Of horns and hounds, clap back her car,
 Afraid to keep or leave her form. Prier.

12. Form is the essential, specific, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.
 In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form doth adjoin itself. Hooker.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe. Bacon's Natural History.

13. A formal cause; that which gives essence.
 To FORM, v. a. [from forma, Latin.]

1. To make out of materials. Gen. ii. 7.
 God form'd man of the dust of the ground. Pope.
 She form'd the phantom of well-bodied air.

He dies too soon;
 And fate, if possible, must be delay'd:
 The thought that labours in my forming brain,
 Yet crude and immature, demands more time. Rowe.

8. To model by education or institution.

Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
 And seem to labour when he labours not:

Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind,
 And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind. Dryd. Virg. Gen.

FORMAL, adj. [from forma, French; formalis, Latin.]

1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectionation.

The justice,
 In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
 With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
 Full of wise saws and modern instances,
 And to he plays his part. Shakespeare's As you like it.

In gait and countenance surely like a father. Shakespeare.
 Ceremonies especially be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish the credit of him that speaks. Bacon, Essay 53.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but the same may be taken away, if occasion serve. Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.

As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemy of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pyrates. Bacon's Holy War.

3. Regular; methodical.

The formal stars do travel so,
 As we their names and courses know;
 And he that on their changes looks,
 Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.

Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
 Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most. Dryd. Aureng.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
 Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice: the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated. Held's Elements of Speech.

FOR

Bellarmino agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but withal he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillington.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentl.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristic.
 Thou shouldest come like a fury cover'd with snakes,
 Not like a formal man. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

I will not let him stir,
 'Till I have us'd th' approved means I have;
 With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
 To make of him a formal man again. Shakespeare. Com. of Err.

FORMALIST, n.f. [from formaliste, French, from forma.] One who practices external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satyr to persons of judgment, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficies to seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon, Essay 27.

A grave, stanch, skilfully managed face, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, having got many a fly formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety. South's Sermons.

FORMALITY, n.f. [from formalite, French, from forma.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.

The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hooker, b. v. f. 29.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate dignities. King Charles.
 Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners. L'Estrange, Fable 184.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom; but of conscience. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Solemn order, habit, or dress.

If men forswear the deeds and bonds they draw,
 Though sign'd with all formality of law;
 And though the signing and the seal proclaim
 The barefaced perjury, and fix the frame. Dryden's Juven.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all fat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Swift.

3. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the imposture of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Glavin's Serp. c. 13.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pound to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Stillington's Def. of Diss. on Rom. Idol.

To FORMALIZE, v. a. [from formalis, French, from forma.]

1. To model; to modify. A word not now in use.

The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalize, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were so many limbs compacted into one body. Hooker, b. v. f. 56.

2. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.

FORMALLY, adv. [from formal.]

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies or rites.

Formally, according to our law, Shakespeare's Richard II.

Depose him.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier on Pride.

3. In open appearance; with visible and apparent show.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorized guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hooker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it. South's Sermons.
 The Heathens and the Christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a Christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Snalbridge's Sermons.

FORMATION, n.f. [from formation, French, from forma, Latin.]

1. The act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged forth of vulcano's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
 The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fetus. Arbutn.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FOR

FORMATIVE. adj. [from forma, Latin.] Having the power of giving form; plastic.

As we have established our assertion of the femal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil. Bentley's Sermons.

FORMER. n. f. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses. Ray on the Creation.

FORMER. adj. [from forma, Saxon, first; whence former, and former now commonly written former, as if derived from before. Former is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say, the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place.]

1. Before another in time.
Thy air,
Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:
—A third is like the former. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Mentioned before another.
A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past: as, this was the custom in former times.

FORMERLY. adv. [from former.] In times past.
The places mentioned were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their Summer. Addison on Italy.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal falls, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbutnot.

FORMIDABLE. adj. [from formidabilis, Latin; formidabile, Fr.] Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrific; to be feared.
I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind. Dryden's Æn. Dedication.

They seem'd to fear the formidable sight,
And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryden.

FORMIDABLENESS. n. f. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.
They rather chafe to be shew'd the formidableness of their danger, than, by a blind embracing it, to perish in it. Decay of Piety.

FORMIDABLY. adv. [from formidable.] In a terrible manner.
Behold! 't'ent to remoter shores,
A conquering navy proudly spread; Dryden.

FORMLESS. adj. [from form.] Shapeless; without regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless.

Save what is opposite to England's love. Shakespeare, K. John.

FORMULARY. n. f. [from formula, French, from formula.] A book containing stated and prescribed models or set forms.

FORMULE. n. f. [from formula, French; formula, Latin.] A set or prescribed model.

TO FORNIFICATE. v. a. [from fornix, Latin.] To commit lewdness.

It is a new way to fornicate at a distance. Brown's Vul. Err.

FORNICATION. n. f. [from fornication, French; fornicatio, Latin.]

1. Concubinage or commerce with an unmarried woman.
Bless me! what a fry of fornication is at the door. Shakespeare.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at best. Graunt.

2. In Scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot, because of thy renown, and pouredst out thy fornications, on every one that passed by. Ezek. xvi. 15.

FORNICATOR. n. f. [from fornicateur, French, from fornix, Latin.] One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

FORNICATRESS. n. f. [from fornicator.] A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd;

Let her have needful but not slavish means. Shakespeare.

TO FORSAKE. v. a. preter. forsook; part. pass. forsoke, or forsoaken. [from for, Saxon, and for, Dutch.]

1. To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.
'I was now the time when first Saul God forsook, God Saul; the room in's heart wild passions took. Cowley.

Orestes comes in time
To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools apace;
Prevent his falsehood, and forsoke him first:
I know you hate him. A. Phillips's Discreet Mother.

Daughter of Jove! whose arms in thunder wield
Th' avenging bolts, and shake the dreadful shield,

FOR

Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.
Unwilling I forsook my friendly state,
Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate. Dryden's Æn.

3. To desert; to fail.
Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;
Fraud, avarice, and force their places took. Dryden.

When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more,
Forsook of all fight left the shore. Dryden.

Their purple majesty,
And all those outward shows which we call greatness,
Languish and droop, seem empty and forsoaken,
And draw the wond'ring gazers eyes no more. Rever.

FORSAKER. n. f. [from forsoke.] Deserter; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forsoakers of God. Apocrypha.

FORSOOT. adv. [from forsoke, Saxon.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lyfander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection? Shakespeare.

A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate. Hayward.

Unlearned persons use such letters as justly express the power or sound of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French. Holder's Elem. of Speech.

In the East-Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord. Addison's Freeholder.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown. Arbutnot.

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that summa arithmetica that Cicero speaks of. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

2. It is supposed to have been once a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, fixed his attention by answering in the word yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakespeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam. Guardian.

TO FORSWEAR. v. a. pret. forsovere; part. forsover. [from for, Saxon, and swear, Latin.]

1. To renounce upon oath.
I firmly vow
Never to wooe her more; but do forsovere her,
As one unworthy all the former favours,
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. Shakespeare.

2. To deny upon oath.
And that self chain about his neck,
Which he forsovere not so trustfully to have. Shakespeare.

Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,
How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!
Like innocence, and as serenely bold
As truth, how loudly he forsovere thy gold! Dryden.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to forsovere himself; to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forsovere?

To love fair Silvia, shall I be forsovere?

To wrong my friend, shall I be much forsovere?

And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury. Shakespeare.

One says, he never should endure the sight
Of that forsovere, that wrongs both land and laws. Daniel.

I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,
Eternal love and endless faith to Thebes;
And yet am false, forsovere: the hallow'd shrine,
That heard me swear, is witness to my falsehood. Smith.

TO FORSWEAR. v. n. To swear falsely; to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
—And that same vengeance doth hurl on thee,
For false forsoverings, and for murder too. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

FORSWEARER. n. f. [from forsovere.] One who is perjured.

FORT. n. f. [from fort, French.] A fortified house; a castle.

They erected a fort, which they called the fort de l'or; and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest. Bacon.

Your flaming courage, and your matchless worth,
To fierce contention gave a prosperous end. Waller.

6. Thoroughly; from beginning to end.
You, cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do to your injuries as seems you best. Shakespeare.

7. To a certain degree.
Hence we learn, how far forth we may expect justification and salvation from the sufferings of Christ; no farther than we are wrought on by his renewing grace. Hannand.

8. On to the end.
I repeated the Ave Maria: the inquisitor had me say forth;
I said I was taught no more. Memoir in S. rype.

FORTH. prop. Out of.
And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret. Shakespeare.

Some forth their cabins peep,
And trembling ask what news, and do hear so
As jealous husbands, what they would not know. Donne.

FORTHCOMING. adj. [from forth and coming.] Ready to appear; not absconding; not lost.

Carry this mad knave to jail: I charge you see that he be forthcoming. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.

FORTIFIABLE. adj. [from fortify.] What may be fortified.

FORTIFICATION. n. f. [from fortification, French, from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular or irregular; and, with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary. Harris.

The Phœacians, tho' an unwelcome nation, yet understood the art of fortification. Notes on the Odyssey.

2. A place built for strength.
Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgments, might dispense some advantage. Sidney, b. ii.

FORTIFIER. n. f. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.
The fortifier of Pendennis made his advantage of the commodity afforded by the ground. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.
He was led forth by many armed men, who often had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution. Sidney.

TO FORTIFY. v. a. [from fortify, French.]

1. To strengthen against attacks by walls or works.
Great Dunlunne he strongly fortifies. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He fortified the city against besieging. Exclus. l. 4.

2. To confirm; to encourage.
It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. Sidney, b. ii.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.
But in-born worth that fortune can controul,
New-strung and stiffer bent her softer soul:
The heroine assum'd the woman's place.
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.

A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Locke.

FORTILAGE. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort; a blockhouse.

In all straits and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set, which should keep and command the strait. Spenser or Ireland.

FORTIN. n. f. [French.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege.

Thou hast talk'd
Of palisades, fortins, parapets. Shakespeare, Henry IV. p. i.

FORTITUDE. n. f. [from fortitudo, Latin.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The better fortitude
Unfing. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man. Locke.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell! Shakespeare, H. VI.

FORTLET. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort.

FORTNIGHT. n. f. [contracted from fourteen nights, proper noun, Saxon. It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights: thus we say, this day seven-nights. So Tacitus, Non dierum numerum ut nos, sed noctium computant.] The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney, b. ii.

Hanging in a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnights space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick. Bacon's Natural History.

About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad. Dryden.

He often had it in his head, but never, with much apprehension, 'till about a fortnight before. Swift.

FORTRESS. n. f. [from fortress, French.] A strong hold; a fortified place; a castle of defence.

Breaking

FOR

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-ran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses. Spenser on Ireland.
The trump of death sounds in their hearing thrill;
Their weapon, faith; their fortresses was the grave. Fairfax.
God is our fortress, in whose conquering name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks. Shak. Hen. VI.
There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet makes these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

FORTUITOUS. adj. [fortuitus, French; fortuitus, Lat.] Accidental; casual; happening by chance.
A wonder then it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concurrence of atoms. Ray on the Creation.

If casual concurrence did the world compose,
And things and acts fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring. Blackmore.
FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.] Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements. Rogers.
FORTUITOUSNESS. n. f. [from fortuitous.] Accident; chance; hit.

FORTUNATE. adj. [fortunatus, Latin.] Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to misfortune. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He fight'd; and could not but their fate deplore,
So wretched now, so fortunate before. Dryd. Knight's Tale.

No, there is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate:
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
And that assurance holds him firm and right:

True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,
But right before there is no precipice;
Fear makes men look aside, and so their footing mis. Dry.

FORTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.] Happily; successfully.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,
And boldly wife, and fortunately great. Prior.

FORTUNATENESS. n. f. [from fortunate.] Happiness; good luck; success.

O me, said she, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfortunateness. Sidney, b. ii.

FORTUNE. n. f. [fortuna, Latin; fortune, French.]

1. The power supposed to distribute the lots of life according to her own humour.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to the poor. Shakespeare's King Lear.

'Tis fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel. Shak. H. VI.

2. The good or ill that befalls man.

Rejoice, said he, to-day;
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:
Among so brave a people you are they Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize. Dryden.

The adequate meaning of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befall only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies. Bentley.

3. The chance of life; means of living.

His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune. Swift.

4. Event; success good or bad.

This terrestrial globe has been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators. Temple.

No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live;
Our equal crimes shall equal fortune give. Dryd. Innocence.

5. Estate; possessions.

If thou do'st
As this instructs thee, thou do'st make thy way
To noble fortunes. Shakespeare's King Lear.

That cyclops head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise his fortune. Shakespeare's King Lear.

But tell me, Tyrrhus, what heav'nly power Preserv'd your fortune in that fatal hour? Dryd. Virg. Post.

The fate which governs poets, thought it fit
He should not raise his fortune by his wit. Dryden.

He was younger son to a gentleman of a good birth, but small fortune. Swift.

6. The portion of a man or woman: generally of a woman.

I am thought some heirs rich in lands,
Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;
Which may produce a story worth the telling,
Of the next sparks that go a fortune stealing. Prol. to Orphan.

The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her, and take care to plant themselves in her view. Speilator.

FOR

When mis's delights in her spinnet,
A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.

7. Futurity; future events.

You who mens fortunes in their faces read,
To find out mine, look not, alas, on me;
But mark her face, and all the features heed;
For only there is writ my destiny. Cowley's Mistress.

TO FORTUNE. v. n. [from the noun.] To befall; to fall out; to happen; to come casually to pass.

It fortune'd, as fair it then befall,
Behind his back, unweaving, where he stood,
Of ancient time there was a springing well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood. Fairy Queen.

It fortune'd the same night that a Christian, serving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning that the Turks prepared the next day to give a general assault. Kneller.

I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortune'd.
Here fortune'd Curl to slide. Shakespeare.

FORTUNED. adj. Supplied by fortune.

Not th' imperious show
Of the full fortune'd Caesar ever shall Be brook'd with me. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

FORTUNEBOOK. n. f. [fortune and book.] A book consulted to know fortune or future events.

Thou know'st a face, in whose each look Beauty lays open love's fortunebook;
On whose fair revolutions wait
The obsequious motions of love's fate. Crowley.

FORTUNEHUNTER. n. f. [fortune and hunter.] A man whose employment is to enquire after women with great portions to enrich himself by marrying them.

We must, however, distinguish between fortunehunters and fortunechealers. Speilator, N° 312.

TO FORTUNETELL. v. n. [fortune and tell.]

1. To pretend to the power of revealing futurity.

We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling. Shakespeare.

I'll conjure you, I'll fortunete! you.
The gypsies were to divide the money got by stealing linen, or by fortunetelling. Walton's Angler.

2. To reveal futurity.

Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortunetelling lines. Cleaveland.

FORTUNETELLER. n. f. [fortune and teller.] One who cheats common people by pretending to the knowledge of futurity.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller. Shakespeare.

A Welchman being at a fections-house, and seeing the prisoners hold up hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die. Bacon's Appointments.

Haft thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret things by lot? Duppa's Rules for Devotion.

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other, to the setting up of a fortuneteller. L'Estrange, Table 94.

Long ago a fortuneteller Exactly said what now befall her. Swift.

FORTY. adj. [quadraginta, Saxon.] Four times ten.

On fair ground I could beat forty of them. Shak. Coriol.

He that upon levity quits his station, in hopes to be better, 'tis forty to one loses. L'Estrange.

FORUM. n. f. [Latin.] Any public place.

The forum was a public place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judge in matters of property, or in criminal cases, to accuse or excuse, to complain or defend. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

Close to the bay great Neptune's fane adjoins,
And near a forum flank'd with marble shines,
Where the bold youth, the numerous fleets to store,
Shape the broad sail, or smooth the taper oar. Pope.

TO FORWARD. v. a. [for and wander.] To wander wildly and wearily.

The better part now of the ling'ring day
They travelled had, when as they far esp'd
A weary wight forward'ring by the way. Fairy Queen, b. i.

FORWARD. adv. [forwards, Saxon.] Towards; to a part or place before; onward; progressively.

When fervent sorrow flaked was,
She up arose, resolving him to find
Alive or dead, and forward forth dot'd pass. Fairy Queen.

From smaller things the mind of the hearers may go forward to the knowledge of greater, and climb up from the lowest to the highest things. Hobbes, b. v. f. 20.

He that is used to go forward, and findeth a stop, falleth of his own favour, and is not the thing he was. Bacon's Essay.

FORWARD.

FOS

FORWARD. adj. [from the adverb.]

1. Warm; earnest.

They would that we should remember the poor, which I also was forward to do. Gal. ii. 10.

2. Ardent; eager; hot; violent.

You'll still be too forward. Shakespeare. Two Gent. of Verona.

Unskill'd to dart the pointed spear,
Or lead the forward youth to noble war. Prior.

3. Ready; confident; presumptuous.

Old Bute's form he took, Anchief's squire,
Now left to rule Alcanius by his fire;
And thus salutes the boy, too forward for his years. Dryd.

4. Not reserved; not over modest.

'Tis a per'ous boy,
Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

5. Premature; early ripe.

Short Summer lightly has a forward Spring. Sb. R. III.

6. Quick; ready; hasty.

The mind makes not that benefit it should of the information it receives from civil or natural historians, in being too forward or too slow in making observations on the particular facts recorded in them. Locke.

Had they, who would persuade us that there are innate principles, considered separately the parts out of which these propositions are made, they would not perhaps have been so forward to believe they were innate. Locke.

7. Antecedent; anterior: opposed to posterior.

Let us take the infant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'it decrees
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakespeare.

8. Not behindhand; not inferior.

My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as She is 't' rear of our birth. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

TO FORWARD. v. a. [from the adverb.]

1. To hasten; to quicken; to accelerate in growth or improvement.

As we house hot country plants, as lemons, to save them; so we may house our own country plants to forward them, and make them come in the cold seasons. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Whenever I shine,
I forward the grass and I ripen the vine. Swift.

2. To patronise; to advance.

FORWARDER. n. f. [from forward.] He who promotes any thing.

FORWARDLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Eagerly; hastily; quickly.

The sudden and surprising turns we ourselves have felt, should not suffer us too forwardly to admit presumption. Aster.

FORWARDNESS. n. f. [from forward.]

1. Eagerness; ardour; readiness to act.

Absolutely we cannot commend, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hobbes.

Is it to frame a matter to find a good thing furthered by ill men of a sinister intent and purpose, whose forwardness is not therefore a bribe to such as favour the false cause with a better and sincere meaning. Heater, b. iv. f. 9.

If the great ones were in forwardness, the people were in fury, entertaining this airy phantasm with incredible affection. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. Quickness; readiness.

He had such a dextrous proclivity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness; to the end that his brothers, who were under the same training, might hold pace with him. Watton.

3. Earliness; early ripeness.

4. Confidence; assurance; want of modesty.

In France it is usual to bring their children into company, and to cherish in them, before their infancy, a kind of forwardness and assurance. Addison on Italy.

FOSSET. See FAUCET.

FOSSEWAY. n. f. [fosse and way.] One of the great Roman inroads through England, so called from the ditches on each side.

FOSSEL. adj. [fossilis, Latin; fossile, French.] That which is dug out of the earth.

The fossil shells are many of them of the same kinds with those that now appear upon the neighbouring shores; and the rest such as may be presumed to be at the bottom of the adjacent seas. Woodward's Natural History.

Fossil or rock salt, and sal gemm, differ not in nature from each other; nor from the common salt of salt springs, or that of the sea, when pure. Woodward's Natural History.

FOSSEL.

It is of a middle nature, between fossil and animal; being produced from animal excrements, intermixed with vegetable salts. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FOSSEL. n. f.

In this globe are many other bodies, which, because we discover them by digging into the bowels of the earth, are called by one common name fossil; under which are comprehended metals and minerals. Locke.

Many kinds of fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped. Bentley's Sermons.

By the word fossil, used as a denomination of one of three general divisions of natural productions, we understand bodies formed usually within the earth, sometimes on its surface, and sometimes in waters; of a plain and simple structure, in which there is no visible difference of parts, no distinction of vessels and their contents, but every portion of which is similar to and perfect as the whole. Hill's Mat. Med.

TO FOSTER. v. a. [from for, Saxon.]

1. To nurse; to feed; to support; to train up.

Thy threat'ning colours now wind up;
And tame the savage spirit of wild war;
That, like a lion foster'd up at hand,
It may lie gently at the foot of peace. Shakespeare. King John.

Some say that ravens foster forlorn children. Shakespeare.

Our kingdom's earth should not be foil'd
With that dear blood, which it hath foster'd. Shakespeare. R. II.

That base wretch,
Bred on alms, and foster'd with cold dishes,
With scraps of th' court. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood. Davies on Ireland.

No more let Ireland brag her harmless nation
Fosters no venom, since that Scots plantation. Cleaveland.

The son of Mulciber,
Found in the fire, and foster'd in the plains,
A shepherd and a king at once he reigns. Dryd. Æn. b. vii.

2. To pamper; to encourage.

A prince of great courage and beauty, but fostered up in blood by his naughty father. Sidney, b. ii.

3. To cherish; to forward.

Ye fostering breezes, blow;
Ye softening dews, ye tender showers descend. Thomson.

FOSTERAGE. n. f. [from foster.] The charge of nursing; al-terage.

Some one adjoining to this lake had the charge and fosterage of this child, who being, perchance, but some base and obscure creature, was cast from the top of her temple into the lake adjoining; and, as the poets have feigned, changed by Venus into a fish, all but her face. Raleigh's History.

FOSTERBROTHER. n. f. [from foster and brother, Saxon.] One bred at the same pap; one fed by the same nurse.

FOSTERCHILD. n. f. [from foster and child, Saxon.] A child nursed by a woman not the mother, or bred by a man not the father.

The fosterchildren do love and are beloved of their foster-fathers. Davies on Ireland.

The goddess thus beguill'd,
With pleasant stories, her false fosterchild. Addison on Met.

FOSTERDAM. n. f. [foster and dam.] A nurse; one that performs the office of a mother by giving food to a young child.

There, by the wolf, were laid the martial twins:
Intrepid on her swelling dugs they hung;
The fosterdam loll'd out her fawning tongue. Dryden's Æn.

FOSTEREARTH. n. f. [foster and earth.] Earth by which the plant is nourished, though it did not grow at first in it.

In vain, the nursing grove
Seems fair a while, cherish'd with fosterearth;
But when the alien compost is exhaull,
Its native poverty again prevails! Phillips.

FOSTERER. n. f. [from foster.] A nurse; one who gives food in the place of a parent.

In Ireland they put their children to fosterers; the rich men selling, the meaner sort buying the alterage of their children: in the opinion of the Irish fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood; and the fosterchildren do love, and are beloved of their fosterfathers and their sept, more than of their own natural parents and kindred. Davies on Ireland.

FOSTERFATHER. n. f. [from foster and father, Saxon.] One who gives food in the place of the father.

In Ireland fosterchildren do love and are beloved of their fosterfathers, and their sept, more than of their own natural parents and kindred. Davies on Ireland.

The duke of Bretagne having been an host and a kind of parent or fosterfather to the king, in his tenderness of age and weakness of fortune, did look for aid this time from king Henry. Bacon's Henry VII.

Tyrreus, the fosterfather of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden's Æn.

FOSTERMOTHER. n. f. [foster and mother.] A nurse.

FOSTERNURSE. n. f. [foster and nurse.] This is an improper compound, because foster and nurse mean the same. A nurse.

FOU

Jesús rebuked the foul spirit. Mar. ix. 25.
He hates foul leavings and vile flattery,
Two filthy blots in noble gentery. Hubbard's Tale.
This is the grossest and most irrational supposition, as well as the foultest atheism, that can be imagined. Hale.
Satire has always shone among the rest,
And is the boldest way, if not the best,
To tell men truly of their foultest faults,
To laugh at their vain deeds, and vainer thoughts. Dryden.
4. Not lawful; not according to the established rules.
By foul play were we heav'd thence,
But blessedly help'd hither. Shakespeare's Tempest.
5. Hateful; ugly; loathsome.
Th' other half did woman's shape retain,
Most loathsome, filthy, foul, and full of vile disdain. F. Ry.
Hath thou forgot
The foul witch Sycorax, who with age and envy
Was grown into a hoop? Shakespeare's Tempest.
Foul sights do rather displease, in that they excite the memory of foul things than in the immediate objects; and therefore, in pictures, those foul sights do not much offend. Bacon.
6. Disgraceful; shameful.
Too well I see and rue the dire event,
That with sad overthrow and foul defeat
Hath lost us heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
Who first seduc'd them to the foul revolt? Milt. P. Lost.
Reason half extinct,
Or impotent, or else approving, fees
The foul disorder. Thomson's Spring.
7. Coarse; gross.
You will have no notion of delicacies, if you table with them: they are all for rank and foul feeding, and spoil the best provisions in cooking. Felton on the Classics.
8. Full of gross humours, or bad matter; wanting purgation or mundification.
You perceive the body of our kingdom,
How foul it is; what rank diseases grow,
And with what danger near the heart of it. Shakef. H. IV.
9. Not bright; not serene.
Who's there besides foul weather?
One minded like the weather, most inquietly. Sh. K. Lear.
Be fair or foul, or rain or shine,
The joys I have profess'd, in spite of fate are mine. Dryd.
10. With rough force; with unfeeling violence.
So in this throng bright Sacharissa far'd,
Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard:
As ships, though never to obsequious, fall
Vain in a tempest on their admiral. Walker.
In his fallies their men might fall foul of each other. Clarend.
The great art of the devil, and the principal deceit of the heart, is to keep fair with God himself, while men fall foul upon his laws. South's Sermons.

the worms draw them into their holes, and foul your gardens.
Evelyn's Kalendar.
While Traulus all his ordure scatters,
To foul the man he chiefly flatters. Swift.
She fouls a smock more in one hour than the kitchen-maid doth in a week. Swift's Directions to Servants.
FOULFACED. adj. [foul and facied.] Having an ugly or hateful visage.
If black scandal, or foulfac'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shakef. R. III.
FOULLY. adv. [from foul.] Filthily; nastily; odiously;
hatefully; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully.
We in the world's wide mouth
Live scandaliz'd, and foully spoken of. Shakef. Henry IV.
The letter to the protector was gilded over with many smooth words; but the other two did fully and foully set forth his obstinacy, avarice and ambition. Hayward.
O brother, brother! Filbert still is true;
I foully wrong'd him: do, forgive me, do. Goy.
FOULMOUTHED. adj. [foul and mouth.] Scurrilous; habi-tuated to the use of opprobrious terms and epithets.
My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foulmouth'd man as he is, and said he would cudgel you. Shak. H. IV.
It was allowed by every body, that so foulmouthed a witness never appeared in any cause. Addison.
My reputation is too well established in the world to receive any hurt from such a foulmouthed scoundrel as he. Arbut.
Now singing thrills, and folding oft between,
Scolds answer foulmouth'd scolds; bad neighbourhood I ween. Swift.
FOULNESS. n. f. [from foul.]
1. The quality of being foul; filthiness; nastiness.
The ancients were wont to make garments that were not destroyed but purified by fire; and whereas the spots or foul-ness of other cloaths are washed out, in these they were usually burnt away. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
2. Pollution; impurity.
It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour. Shakef.
There is not so chaste a nation as this, nor so free from all pollution or foulness: it is the virgin of the world. Bacon.
3. Hatred; enmity.
He by an affection sprung up from excessive beauty, should not delight in horrible foulness. Stany.
Conful, you are too mild:
The foulness of some facts takes thence all mercy:
Report it to the senate. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
It is the wickedness of a whole life, discharging all its filth and foulness into this one quality, as into a great sink or common shore. South's Sermons.
4. Ugliness; deformity.
He's fallen in love with your foulness, and she'll fall in love with my anger. Shakespeare's As you like it.
The fury laid aside
Her looks and limbs, and with new methods tried
The foulness of th' infernal form to hide. Dryden's Æn.
5. Dishonesty; want of candour.
Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all falseness or foulness of intentions; especially to that personated devotion, under which any kind of impiety is wont to be disguised. Liammond's Fundamentals.
FOUND. The preterite and participle passive of find.
I am fought of them that asked not for me: I am fought of them that fought me not. If. lxx. 1.
To FOUND. v. a. [fundare, Latin; fonder, French.]
1. To lay the basis of any building.
It fell not; for it was found upon a rock. Math. vii.
He hath *found*ed it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods. If. xlv. 2.
2. To build; to raise.
These tunes of reason are Amphion's lyre,
Wherewith he did the Theban city found. Davies.
They Gabian walls, and strong Videne rear,
Nomentum, Bola with Pometia found.
And raise Colatan tow'rs on rocky ground. Dryden's Æn.
3. To establish; to erect.
This also shall they gain by their delay
In the wide wilderness; there they shall found their government, and their great senate chuse,
Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd. Milt.
He *found*ing a library, gathered together the acts of the kings and prophets. 2 Mac. ii. 13.
4. To give birth or original to: as, he *found*ed an art; he *found*ed a family.
5. To raise upon, as on a principle or ground.
Though some have made use of the opinion of some schoolmen,

6. To fix firm.
Fleance is escap'd.
—Then comes my fit again: I had else been perfect, Whole as the marble, *found*ed as the rock. Shakef. Macbeth.
To FOUND. v. a. [fundere, Latin; fondre, French.] To form by melting and pouring into moulds; to cast.
FOUNDATION. n. f. [fondation, French.]
1. The basis or lower parts of an edifice.
The stateliness of houses, the goodliness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye; but that foundation which beareth up the one, that root which minisheth unto the other nourishment and life, is in the bosom of the earth concealed.
Hooker, b. i. f. 1.
That is the way to make the city flat,
To bring the roof to the foundation. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
To bury all.
O Jove, I think,
Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean,
Where they should be reliev'd. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
I draw a line along the shore;
I lay the deep foundations of a wall,
And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call. Dryden's Æn.
2. The act of fixing the basis.
Ne'er to these chambers where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation, came a nobler guest. Tickel.
3. The principles or ground on which any notion is raised.
If we give way to our passions, we do but gratify ourselves for the present, in order to our future diquiet; but if we resist and conquer them, we lay the foundation of perpetual peace in our minds. Tillotson, Sermon 6.
That the should be subject to her husband, the laws of mankind and customs of nations have ordered it so; and there is a foundation in nature for it. Locke.
4. Original; rise.
Throughout the world, even from the first foundation thereof, all men have either been taken as lords or lawful kings in their own houses. Hooker, b. i. f. 10.
5. A revenue settled and established for any purpose, particularly charity.
He had an opportunity of going to school on a foundation. Swift.
6. Establishment; settlement.
FOUNDER. n. f. [from found.]
1. A builder; one who raises an edifice; one who presides at the erection of a city.
Of famous cities we the founders know;
But rivers, old as seas to which they go,
Are nature's bounty: 'tis of more renown
To make a river than to build a town. Waller.
Nor was Prænest's founder wanting there,
Whom fame reports the son of Mulciber;
Found in the fire, and foster'd in the plains;
A shepherd and a king at once he reigns. Dryden's Æn.
2. One who establishes a revenue for any purpose.
The wanting orphans saw with wat'ry eyes
Their founders charity in the dust laid low. Dryden.
This hath been experimentally proved beyond contradiction, by the honourable founder of this lecture in his treatise of the air. Bentley.
3. One from whom any thing has its original or beginning.
And the rude notions of pedantick schools
Blaspheme the sacred founder of our rules. Ryccommon.
When Jove, who saw from high, with just disdain,
The dead inspir'd with vital breath again,
Struck to the center with his flaming dart
'Tis unhappy founder of the godlike art. Dryden's Æn.
King James I. the founder of the Stuart race, had he not confined all his views to the peace of his own reign, his son had not been involved in such fatal troubles. Addison, Freehold.
Nor can the skillful herald trace
The founder of thy ancient race. Swift.
4. [Fondeur, French.] A carter; one who forms figures by casting melted matter into moulds.
Founders add a little antimony to their bell-metal, to make it more sonorous; and so pewterers to their pewter, to make it found more clear like silver. Grew's Museum.
To FOUNDER. v. a. [fondre, French.] To cause such a fore-ness and tenderness in a horse's foot, that he is unable to set it to the ground.
Phœbus' steeds are founder'd,
Or night kept chain'd below. Shakespeare's Tempest.

FOU

- I have *found*ed nine score and odd posts; and here, travellanted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valours, taken Sir John Coleville of the Dale, a most furious knight;
but what of that? he saw me and yielded. Shakef. Henry IV.
Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly;
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood. Dorset.
Brutes find out where their talents lie:
A bear will not attempt to fly;
A founder'd horse will oft debate,
Before he tries a five-harr'd gate. Swift.
If you find a gentleman fond of your horse, persuade your master to sell him, because he is vicious, and *founder*ed into the bargain. Swift's Directions to the Groom.
Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, drive them through the hardest and deepest roads, without danger of foundering or breaking their backs, and will be sure to find them neither resty nor vicious. Swift.
To FOUNDER. v. n. [from fond, French, the bottom.]
1. To sink to the bottom.
New ships, built at those rates, have been ready to founder in the seas with every extraordinary storm. Raleigh's Essays.
2. To fail; to miscarry.
In this point
All his tricks founder; and he brings his physick
After his patient's death. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
FOUNDERY. n. f. [fonderie Fr. from found.] A place where figures are formed of melted metal; a castinghouse.
FOUNDLING. n. f. [from found of find.] A child exposed to chance; a child found without any parent or owner.
We, like bastards, are laid abroad, even as foundlings, to be trained up by grief and sorrow. Sidney.
I pass the foundling by, a race unknown,
At doors expos'd, whom matrons make their own;
And into noble families advance
A nameless issue; the blind work of chance. Dryd. Juven.
I shall mention a piece of charity which is practised by most of the nations about us: I mean a provision for foundlings, or for those children who, for want of such a provision, are exposed to the barbarity of cruel and unnatural parents. Addison.
The goddess long had mark'd the child's distress,
And long had fought his lust'ring to redress;
She prays the gods to take the foundling's part,
To teach his hands some beneficial art
Practis'd in streets. Gay's Trivia.
FOUNDERESS. n. f. [from founder.]
1. A woman that founds, builds, establishes, or begins any thing.
2. A woman that establishes any charitable revenue.
For of their order she was patroness,
Albe Charilla was their chiefest foundress. Fairy Queen, b. i.
For zeal like her's, her servants were to shew;
She was the first, where need requir'd to go;
Herself the found ess, and attendant too. Dryden.
FOUNT.
FOUNTAIN. n. f. [fons, Latin; fontaine, French.]
1. A well; a spring.
He set before him spread
A table of celestial food divine,
Ambrosial fruits, fetcht from the tree of life;
And from the fount of life ambrosial drink. Milt. Par. Reg.
2. A small basin of springing water.
Proofs as clear as founts in July, when
We see each grain of gravel. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Can a man drink better from the fountain when it is finely paved with marble, than when it swells over the green turf?
Taylor's Rule of living holy.
Narcissus on the grassy verdure lies;
But whilst within the crystal fount he tries
To quench his heat, he feels new heat arise. Addison.
3. A jet; a spout of water.
Fountains I intend to be of two natures: the one that sprinkles or spouts water; the other a fair receipt of water, without fish, or lime, or mud. Bacon, Essay 47.
4. The head or first spring of a river.
All actions of your grace are of a piece, as waters keep the tenor of their fountains: your compassion is general, and has the same effect as well on enemies as friends. Dryden.
5. Original; first principle; first cause.
Almighty God, the fountain of all goodness. Comm. Prayer.
You may reduce many thousand bodies to these few general figures, as unto their principal heads and fountains. Presham.
This one city may well be reckoned not only the seat of trade and commerce, not only the fountain of habits and fashions, and good breeding, but of morally good or bad manners to all England. Spratt's Sermons.
FOUNTAINLESS. adj. [from fountain.] Without a fountain;
without a spring.

FOU

So large
The prospect was, that here and there was room
For barren desert fountainless and dry. Milton's Parad. Reg.
Fountainful. adj. [from fount and full.] Full of springs.
But when the fountainful Ida's top they scald with utmost haste.
All fell upon the high-hair'd oaks. Chapman's Iliads.
To Foupe. v. a. To drive with sudden impetuosity. A word out of use.
We pronounce, by the confession of strangers, as smoothly and moderately as any of the northern nations, who foupe their words out of the throat with fat and full spirits. Camden.
FOUR. adj. [from four, Saxon.] Twice two.
Just as I wish'd, the lots were cast on four;
Myself the fifth. Pope's Odyssey, l. ix.
FOUR. n. f. [French.] A cheat; a tricking fellow. Not in use.
Jove's envoy, through the air,
Brings dismal tidings; as if such low care
Could reach their thoughts, or their repose disturb!
Thou art a false impostor, and a fourbe. Denham.
FOURFO'LD. adj. [from four and fold.] Four times told.
He shall restore the lamb fourfold, because he had no pity.
2 Sa. xii. 6.
FOURFO'OTED. adj. [from four and foot.] Quadruped; having twice two feet.
Augustus, whose art in vain
From fight dissuaded the fourfooted train,
Now beat the hoof with Nilius on the plain. Dryden.
FOURSCORE. adj. [from four and score.]
1. Four times twenty; eighty.
When they were out of reach, they turned and crossed the ocean to Spain, having lost fourscore of their ships, and the greater part of their men. Bacon's War with Spain.
The Chios were first a free people, being a commonwealth, maintaining a navy of fourscore ships. Sandy.
The Liturgy had, by the practice of near fourscore years, obtained great veneration from all sober Protestants. Clarend.
2. It is used elliptically for fourscore years in numbering the age of man.
At seventeen years many their fortunes seek;
But at fourscore it is too late a week. Shak. As you like it.
Some few might be of use in council upon great occasions,
'till after threecore and ten; and the two late ministers in Spain were so 'till fourcore. Temple.
FOURSCORE. adj. [from four and square.] Quadrangular; having four sides and angles equal.
The temple of Bel was invironed with a wall carried four- square, of great height and beauty; and on each square certain brazen gates curiously engraven. Relig. History.

of contempt.
A foutra for the world, and worldlings base. Shak. H. IV.
FOWL. n. f. [from fowl, Saxon; vegel, Dutch.] A winged animal; a bird. It is colloquially used of edible birds, but in books of all the feathered tribes.
The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their males subjects, and at their controuls. Shaksp.
Lucullus entertained Pompey in a magnificent house: Pompey said, this is a marvellous house for the Summer; but methinks very cold for Winter. Lucullus answered, do you not think me as wise as divers fowls, to change my habitation in the Winter season. Bacon's Apophthegms.
This mighty breath
Instructs the fowls of heaven. Thomson's Spring.
To FOWL. v. n. [from the noun.] To kill birds for food or game.
FOWLER. n. f. [from fowl.] A sportsman who pursues birds.
The fowler, ward'd
By those good omens, with swift early steps
Treads the crimp earth, ranging through fields and glades, Offensive to the birds. Phillips.

FRA

With laugh'ring guns th' unweary'd fowler roves,
When frosts have whiten'd all the naked groves. Pope.
FOWLINGPIECE. n. f. [from fowl and piece.] A gun for birds.
'Tis necessary that the countryman be provided with a good fowlingpiece, to destroy and scare them away. Mortimer.
FOX. n. f. [from fox, Saxon; vos, vosch, Dutch.]
1. A wild animal of the canine kind, with sharp ears and a bulky tail, remarkable for his cunning, living in holes, and preying upon fowls or small animals.
The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb. Shaksp.
He that trusts to you,
Where he should find you lions, finds you hares;
Where foxes, geese. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
These retreats are more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.
2. By way of reproach, applied to a knave or cunning fellow.
FOXCASE. n. f. [from fox and case.] A fox's skin.
One had better be laughed at for taking a foxcase for a fox, than be destroyed by taking a live fox for a case. L'Estrange.
FOXCHASE. n. f. [from fox and chase.] The pursuit of the fox with hounds.
See the same man, in vigour, in the gout;
Alone, in company; in place or out;
Early at business, and at hazard late;
Mad at a foxchase, wife at a debate. Pope, Epistle i.
FOXEVIL. n. f. [from fox and evil.] A kind of disease in which the hair sheds.
FOXGLOVES. n. f. A plant.
The leaves are produced alternately on the branches: the cup of the flower consists of one leaf, which is divided into six ample long segments: the flower consists of one leaf, is tubulose and compressed, and a little reflexed at the brim:
these flowers are disposed in a long spike, and always grow upon one side of the stalk: the ovary of the flower becomes a roundish fruit, which ends in a point, and opens in the middle:
it has two cells, in which many small seeds are contained.
Miller.
FOXHUNTER. n. f. [from fox and hunter.] A man whose chief ambition is to shew his bravery in hunting foxes. A term of reproach used of country gentlemen.
The foxhunters went their way, and then out steals the fox. L'Estrange, Fable 104.
John Wildfire, foxhunter, broke his neck over a fix-bar gate. Speilator, No. 561.
FOXSHIP. n. f. [from fox.] The character or qualities of a fox; cunning; mischievous art.
Hadst thou foxship
To banish him that struck more blows for Rome,
Than thou hast spoken words. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
FOXTROP. n. f. [from fox and trap.] A gin or snare to catch foxes.
Answer a question, at what hour of the night to set a foxtrap. Taller, No. 56.
FOY. n. f. [from foy, French.] Faith; allegiance. An obsolete word.
He Easterland subdued, and Denmark won,
And of them both did foy and tribute raise. Fairy Queen.
To FRAC. v. a. [from fractus, Latin.] To break; to violate; to infringe. Found perhaps only in the following passage.
His days and times are past,
And my reliance on his fracted dates
Has smit my credit. Shakespeare's Timon.
FRACTION. n. f. [from fractio, Fr. fractio, Latin.]
1. The act of breaking; the state of being broken.
It hath been observed by several, that the surface of the earth hath been broke, and the parts of it dislocated; but more particularly several parcels of nature retain still the evident marks of fractio and ruin. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. A broken part of an integral.
Neither the motion of the moon, whereby months are computed, nor the sun, whereby years are accounted, con-sisteth of whole numbers, but admits of fractions and broken parts. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv. c. 13.
Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction. Arbutnot on Coins.
FRACTIONAL. adj. [from fraction.] Belonging to a broken number.
We make a cypher the medium between increasing and decreasing numbers, commonly called absolute or whole numbers, and negative or fractional numbers. Cocker's Arithmetick.
FRACTURE. n. f. [from fractura, Latin.]
1. Breach; separation of continuous parts.
That may do it without any great fracture of the more stable and fixed parts of nature, or the infringement of the laws thereof. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
2. The separation of the continuity of a bone in living bodies.
But thou wilt sin and grief destroy,
That so the broken bones may joy,
And tune together in a well-tet song,
Full of his praises,
Who dead men raises;
Fractures well cur'd, make us more strong. Herbert.
Fractures

FRA

Fractures of the skull are dangerous, not in consequence of the injury done to the cranium itself, but as the brain becomes affected. Sharp's Surgery.
To FRAC. v. a. [from the noun.] To break a bone.
The leg was dressed, and the fractured bones united together. Wifeman's Surgery.
FRAGILE. adj. [from fragilis, French; fragilis, Latin.]
1. Brittle; easily snapped or broken.
To ease them of their griefs,
Their pangs of love, and other incident throes,
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage. Shakespeare's Timon.
The stalk of ivy is tough, and not fragile. Bacon's N. Hist.
When subtle wits have spun their threads too fine,
'Tis weak and fragile, like Arachne's line. Denham.
A dry stick will be easily broken, when a green one will maintain a strong resistance; and yet in the moist substance there is less rest than in what is drier and more fragile. Glanv.
2. Weak; uncertain; easily destroyed.
Much ostentation, vain of fleshly arms,
And fragile arms, much instrument of war,
Long in preparing, soon to nothing brought,
Before mine eyes thou'rt set. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
FRAGILITY. n. f. [from fragilis.]
1. Brittleness; easiness to be broken.
To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decoct bodies in water for two or three days. Bacon's N. Hist.
2. Weakness; uncertainty; easiness to be destroyed.
Fearing the uncertainty of man's fragility, the common chance of war, the violence of fortune. Kneller's History.
3. Frailty; lability to fault.
All could not be right, in such a state, in this lower age of fragility. Watson.
FRAGMENT. n. f. [from fragmentum, Latin.] A part broken from the whole; an imperfect piece.
He who late a sceptre did command,
Now grasps a floating fragment in his hand. Dryden.
Cowley, in his unfinished fragment of the Davidides, has shewn us this way to improvement. Watts's Improvement.
If a thinned or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of one uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton's Opt.
FRAGMENTARY. adj. [from fragment.] Composed of fragments. A word not elegant, nor in use.
She, the is gone; the's gone: when thou know'st this,
What fragmentary rubbish this world is,
Thou know'st, and that it is not worth a thought;
He knows it too too much that thinks it nought. Dante.
FRAGOR. n. f. [Latin.] A noise; a crack; a crash.
Pursu'd by hideous fragors, as before
The flames descend, they in their breaches roar. Sandy.
FRAGRANCE. n. f. [from frangantia, Lat.] Sweetness of smell;
FRAGRANCY. s. pleasing scent; grateful odour.
Eve separate he spies,
Veil'd in a cloud of fragrances, where the flood Half-spy'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.
I am more pleas'd to survey my rows of coleworts and cabbages springing up in their full fragrancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats. Addison's Spectator, No. 47.
Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;
Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrancy. Garth.
Such was the wine; to quench whose fervent steam Scarce twenty measures from the living stream
To cool one cup suffic'd: the goblet crown'd,
Breath'd aromatic fragrances around. Pope's Odyssey, b. ix.
FRAGRANT. adj. [from frangantia, Latin.] Odorous; sweet of smell.
The nymph vouchsaf'd to place
Upon her head the various wreath:
The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;
Their scent, less fragrant than her breath. Prior.
FRAGRANTLY. adv. [from fragrant.] With sweet scent.
As the hope begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe. Mortimer's Husbandry.
FRAIL. n. f.
1. A basket made of rushes.
2. A rush for weaving baskets.
FRAIL. adj. [from fragilis, Latin.]
1. Weak; easily decaying; subject to casualties; easily destroyed.
I know my body's of to frail a kind,
As force without, fevers within can kill. Davies.
When with care we have rais'd this imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand. Rogers, Sermon 5.
2. Weak of resolution; liable to error or seduction.
The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amiss, then may

FRA

these also speak amiss: man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fall in words. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
FRAILNESS. n. f. [from frail.] Weakness; instability.
There is nothing among all the frailnesses and uncertainties of this sublunary world so tottering and unstable as the virtue of a coward. Norris.
FRAILTY. n. f. [from frail.]
1. Weakness of resolution; instability of mind; infirmity.
Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shak.
Nor should'st thou have trusted that to woman's frailty:
Ere I to thee, thou to thyself wast cruel. Milton's Agonistes.
God knows our frailty, pities our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do. Locke.
2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sins of infirmity.
Love did his reason blind,
And love's the noblest frailty of the mind. Dryd. Ind. Emp.
Kind wits will those light faults excuse;
Those are the common frailties of the muse. Dryden.
Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;
And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;
Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
And wait, 'till 'tis no sin to mix with thine. Pope.
FRATISCHUR. n. f. [French.] Freshness; coolness. A word foolishly innovated by Dryden.
Hither in Summer-ev'nings you repair,
To taste the fratichur of the purer air. Dryden.
FRATISE. n. f. [French, the caul of an animal.] A pancake with bacon in it.
To FRAME. v. a.
1. To form or fabricate by orderly construction and union of various parts.
The double gates he findeth locked fast;
The one fair fram'd of burnish'd ivory,
The other all with silver overcast. Spenser.
2. To fit one to another.
They rather cut down their timber to frame it, and to do other such necessities to their convenient use, than to fight.
Abbot's Description of the World.
Hew the timber, saw it out, frame it, and set it together.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
3. To make; to compose.
Then chusing out few words most horrible,
Thereof did verses frame. Spenser.
Fight valiantly to-day;
And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it;
For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour. Shaksp.
4. To regulate; to adjust.
Let us not deceive ourselves by pretending to this excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to it. Tillotson.
5. To form to any rule or method by study or precept.
Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame
Thyself forsooth hereafter theirs. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
I have been a truant to the law;
I never yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the law unto my will. Shaksp. H. VI.
6. To form and digest by thought.
The most abstruse ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it had either from objects of sense, or from its own operations about them. Locke.
Full of that flame his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddess by your matchless charms. Grave.
Urge him with truth to frame his sure replies;
And sure he will; for wisdom never lies. Pope's Odyssey.
How many excellent reasonings are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years? Watts.
7. To contrive; to plan.
Unpardonable the presumption and insolence in contriving and framing this letter was. Clarendon, b. viii.
8. To settle; to scheme out.
Though I cannot make true wars,
I'll frame convenient peace. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
9. To invent; to fabricate, in a bad sense: as, to frame a story or lie.
Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricks and epicycles. Bacon.
FRAME. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A fabric; any thing constructed of various parts or members.
If the frame of the heavenly arch should dissolve itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker, b. i. f. 3.
Cattles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnificence. Bacon.
These are thy glorious works, parent of good!
Almighty! thine this universal frame. Milt. Parad. Lost.
Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame. Dryden.

FRA

- The gate was adamant; eternal frame,
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
The labour of a god; and all along Tough iron plates were clench'd to make it strong. Dryd.
We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it; all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
2. Any thing made so as to inclose or admit something else.
Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mischances. Boyle.
His picture scarcely would deserve a frame. Dryden's Juvenal.
A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be swiftly turned round its axis, will, in turning, thine, where it rubs against the palm of one's hand. Newton's Opt.
3. Order; regularity; adjusted series or disposition.
A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a repairing, ever out of frame, Shakespeare.
And never going aright.
Your steady soul preserves her frame; Swift.
In good and evil times the same.
4. Scheme; order.
Another party did resolve to change the whole frame of the government in state as well as church. Clarendon.
5. Contrivance; projection.
John the Bastard,
Whose spirits toil in frame of villanies, Shakespeare.
6. Mechanical construction.
7. Shape; form; proportion.
A bear's a savage beast,
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Hudibras.
- FRAMER. n. f. [from frame; fremman, Saxon.] Maker;
former; contriver; schemer.
The forger of his own fate, the framer of his fortune, should be improper, if all his actions were predetermined.
Hammond's Fundamentals.
There was want of accurateness in experiments in the first original framer of those medals. Arbutnot on Coins.
- FRAMPOLD. n. f. [This word is written by Dr. Hackett frampul. I know not its original.] Peevish; boisterous; rugged; crossgrained.
Her husband! Alas, the sweet woman leads an ill life with him: she leads a very frampold life with him. Shakespeare.
The frampul man could not be pacified. Hackett's Life of Williams.
- FRANCHISE. n. f. [from franchise, French.]
1. Exemption from any onerous duty.
2. Privilege; immunity; right granted.
They granted them markets, and other franchises, and erected corporate towns among them. Davies on Ireland.
His gracious edict the same franchise yields
To all the wild increase of woods and fields. Dryden.
3. District; extent of jurisdiction.
There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be travelled forth of their own franchises. Spenser's State of Ireland.
- TO FRANCHISE. v. a. [from the noun.] To enfranchise; to make free; to keep free.
I lose no honour
In seeking to augment it; but still keep My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear. Shak. Macbeth.
- FRANGIBLE. adj. [from frangere, Latin.] Fragile; brittle; easily broken.
Though it seem the solidest wood, if wrought before it be well seasoned, it will shew itself very frangible. Boyle.
- FRANION. n. f. [Of this word I know not the derivation.] A paramour; a boon companion.
First, by her side did sit the bold Sandfloy,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy,
Might not be found a franker franion. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
- FRANK. adj. [from franc, French.]
1. Liberal; generous; not niggardly.
The moister sorts of trees yield little moss, which is for the reason of the frank putting up of the sap into the boughs.
Bacon's Natural History.
They were left destitute, either by narrow provision, or by their frank hearts and their open hands, and their charity towards others. Spratt's Sermons.
'Tis the ordinary practice of the world to be frank of civilities that cost them nothing. L'Estrange.
2. Open; ingenuous; sincere; not reserved.
3. Without conditions; without payment.
Thou hast it won; for it is of frank gift,
And he will care for all the rest to shift. Habberd's Tale.

Might not be found a franker franion. Spenser.
- FRANK. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. A place to feed hogs in; a sty; so called from liberality of food.

FRA

- Where sups here? Doth the old boar feed in the old frank? Shakespeare's Henry IV.
2. A letter which pays no postage.
You'll have immediately, by several franks, my epistle to lord Cobham. Pope to Swift.
3. A French coin.
To FRANK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To shut up in a frank or sty. Hammer.
Tell Richmond this from me,
That in the sty of this most bloody boar,
My son George Stanley is frank'd up in hold.
If I revolt, off goes young George's head. Shak. Rich. III.
2. To feed high; to fat; to cram. Janus and Ainsworth.
3. [From the adjective.] To exempt letters from postage.
My lord Orrery writes to you to-morrow; and you see I send this under his cover, or at least franked by him. Swift.
Gazettes sent gratis down, and frank'd,
For which thy patron's weekly thank'd. Pope.
- FRANKALMOIGNE. n. f. The same which we in Latin call libera elemosyna, or free alms in English; whence that tenure is commonly known among our English lawyers by the name of a tenure in frank almoigne, which, according to Britton, is a tenure by divine service. Ayliffe's Parerg.
- FRANKINCENSE. n. f. [from frank and incense, so called perhaps from its liberal distribution of odour.]
Frankincense is a dry resinous substance in pieces or drops, of a pale yellowish white colour; a strong smell, but not disagreeable, and a bitter, acrid, and resinous taste. It is very inflammable. The earliest histories inform us, that frankincense was used among the sacred rites and sacrifices, as it still continues to be in many different parts of the world. As well however as the world has at all times been acquainted with the drug itself, we are still uncertain as to the place whence frankincense is brought, and much more so as to the tree which produces it. It is commended against disorders in the head and breast, and against diarrhoea and dysenteries. Hill.
Take unto thee the sweet spices, with pure frankincense. Exod.
I find in Dioscorides record of frankincense gotten in India. Brewerwood on Languages.
Black ebony only will in India grow,
And od'rous frankincense on the Sabacan bough. Dryd. Virg.
Cedar and frankincense, an od'rous pile.
Flam'd on the hearth, and wide perfume'd the isle. Pope.
- FRANKLIN. n. f. [from frank.] A steward; a bailiff of land.
It signifies originally a little gentleman, and is not improperly English'd a gentleman servant.
A spacious court they see,
Both plain and pleasant to be walk'd in,
Where them does meet a franklin fair and free. Pai. Quen.
- FRANKLY. adv. [from frank.]
1. Liberally; freely; kindly; readily.
Oh, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance,
As frankly as a pin. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly. Sh. H. VIII.
When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. Lu. vii. 42.
By the toughness of the earth the sap cannot get up to spread so frankly as it should do. Bacon's Natural History.
I value my garden more for being full of blackbirds than cherries, and very frankly give them fruit for their songs. Speet.
2. Without constraint; without reserve.
The lords mounted their servants upon their own horses;
and they, with the volunteers, who frankly lifted themselves, amounted to a body of two hundred and fifty horse. Clarend.
He entered very frankly into those new designs, which were contrived at court. Clarendon, b. viii.
- FRANKNESS. n. f. [from frank.]
1. Plainness of speech; openness; ingenuofness.
When the conde duke had some éclaircissement with the duke, in which he made all the protestations with all confession, and declared, with a very unnecessary frankness, that he would have no friendship with him. Clarendon.
Tom made love to a woman of sense, and always treated her as such during the whole time of courtship: his natural temper and good breeding hindered him from doing any thing disagreeable, as his sincerity and frankness of behaviour made him converse with her before marriage in the same manner he intended to do afterwards. Addison's Guardian.
2. Liberality; bountyofness.
3. Freedom from reserve.
Upon occasion of the pictures present, he delivered with the frankness of a friend's tongue, as near as he could, word by word, what Kalandar had told him touching the strange story. Sidney.
The ablest men that ever were, have had all an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity. Bacon, Essay 6.
- FRANKPLEDGE.

FRA

- FRANKPLEDGE. n. f. [from francplegium, Latin, of franc, i. e.
liber & pledge, i. e. stipulatio.] A pledge or surety for freemen. For the ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the public peace, was that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriff, in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they continued in one dozen or other: whereupon this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus francplagi, view of frankpledge. Cowel.
- FRANTICK. adj. [corrupted from phrenetic, phreneticus, Latin; Phrenitis.]
1. Mad; deprived of understanding by violent madness; outrageously and turbulently mad.
Far off, he wonders what makes them so glad;
Of Bacchus merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cebes's frantick rites have made them mad. Fairy Queen.
2. Transported by violence of passion; outrageous; turbulent.
Erelong, in the frantick error of their minds, the greatest madness in the world to be wisdom, and the highest wisdom foolishness. Hooker, b. iii. f. 8.
- The lover, frantick,
Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt. Shakespeare.
To such height their frantick passion grows,
That what both love, both hazard to destroy. Dryden.
She tears her hair, and frantick in her griefs, Calls out Lucia. Addison's Cato.
- FRANTICKLY. adv. [from frantick.] Madly; outrageously.
Fie, fie, how frantickly I square my talk! Shakespeare.
- FRANTICKNESS. n. f. [from frantick.] Madness; fury of passion.
- FRATERNAL. adj. [from fraternal, French; fraternus, Latin]
Brotherly; pertaining to brothers; becoming brothers.
One shall rise
Of proud ambitious heart; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
The admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow Christians, or of the governors of the church, then more publick reprehensions; and upon their unsuccessfulness, the censures of the church, until he reform and return. Hammond's Fundam.
- Plead it to her,
With all the strength and heats of eloquence Fraternal love and friendship can inspire. Addison's Cato.
- FRATERNALLY. adv. [from fraternal.] In a brotherly manner.
- FRATERNITY. n. f. [from fraternal, French; fraternitas, Latin.]
1. The state or quality of a brother.
2. Body of men united; corporation; society; association; brotherhood.
'Tis a necessary rule in alliances, societies, and fraternities, and all manner of civil contracts, to have a strict regard to the humour of those we have to do withal. L'Estrange's Fables.
3. Men of the same class or character.
With what terms of respect knaves and fops will speak of their own fraternity. South's Sermons.
- FRATRICIDE. n. f. [from fratricide, French; fratricidium, Latin.]
The murder of a brother.
- FRAUD. n. f. [from fraus, Latin; fraude, Fr.] Deceit; cheat; trick; artifice; subtlety; stratagem.
None need the frauds of fly Ulysses fear. Dryden's Æn.
If success a lover's toil attends,
Who asks if force or fraud obtain'd his ends. Pope.
- FRAUDFUL. adj. [from fraud and full.] Treacherous; artful; trickish; deceitful; subtle.
The welfare of us all Hangs on the cutting short that fraudulent man. Shak. H. VI.
He, full of fraudulent arts,
This well-invented tale for truth imparts. Dryden's Æn.
- FRAUDFULLY. adv. [from fraudful.] Deceitfully; artfully; subtly; treacherously; by stratagem.
- FRAUDULENCE. n. f. [from fraudulentia, Latin.] Deceitfulness; FRAUDULENCY. n. f. [from fraudulentia, Latin.] Deceitfulness; trickiness; proneness to artifice.
We admire the providence of God in the continuance of Scripture, notwithstanding the endeavours of infidels to abolish, and the fraudulence of heretics always to deprave the same. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.
- FRAUDULENT. adj. [from fraudulentus, Fr. fraudulentus, Latin.]
1. Full of artifice; trickish; subtle; deceitful.
He with serpent tongue
His fraudulent temptation thus began. Milton.
She mix'd the potions, fraudulent of soul;
The potion mantled in the golden bowl. Pope's Odyssey.

FRE

2. Performed by artifice; deceitful; treacherous.
Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam,
And frustrated the conquest fraudulent. Milt. Parad. Reg.
- FRAUDULENTLY. adv. [from fraudulent.] By fraud; by deceit; by artifice; deceitfully.
He that by fact, word, or sign, either fraudulently or violently, does hurt to his neighbour, is bound to make restitution. Taylor's Rule of Living loby.
- FRAUGHT. particip. pass. [from frangere, now written frangit.]
1. Laden; charged.
In the narrow seas that part
The French and English, there miscarried
A vessel of our country, richly fraught. Shakespeare.
With joy
And tidings fraught, to hell he now return'd. Milt. P. Lost.
And now approach'd their fleet from India, fraught
With all the riches of the rising sun,
And precious sand from southern climates brought. Dryden.
2. Filled; stored; thronged.
The Scripture is fraught even with laws of nature. Hooker.
By this sad Una, fraught with anguish sore,
Arriv'd, where they in earth their fruitless blood had spilt.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 6.
I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Whoever hath his mind fraught with many thoughts, his wits and understanding do clarify and break up in the communicating and discoursing with another. Bacon, Essay 18.
Hell, their fit habitation, fraught with fire Unquenchable, the house of woe and pain. Milt. Par. Lost.
Abdallah and Balfora were so fraught with all kinds of knowledge, and possessed with so constant a passion for each other, that their solitude never lay heavy on them. Guardian.
- FRAUGHT. n. f. [from the participle.] A freight; a cargo.
Yield up, oh love, thy crown and parted throne
To tyrannous hate! swell, bosom, with thy freight;
For 'tis of aspics tongues. Shakespeare's Othello.
The bark that all our blessings brought,
Charg'd with thyself and Jane, a doubly royal freight. Dry.
- TO FRAUGHT. v. a. [for frangere, by corruption.] To load;
to crowd.
Hence from my sight:
If after this command, thou fraught the court
With thy unworthiness, thou dy'st. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
- FRAUGHTAGE. n. f. [from frangere.] Lading; cargo. A bad word.
Out fraughtage, fir,
I have convey'd aboard. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.
- FRAY. n. f. [from frayer, to fright, French.]
1. A broil; a battle; a fight.
Time tells, that on that ever blessed day,
When Christian swords with Persian blood were dy'd,
The furious prince Tancredie from that fray
His coward foes chased through forests wide. Fairfax.
I'll speak between the change of man and boy
With a reed voice, and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth. Shak. Merchant of Venice.
After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought. Shak. H. VI.
He left them to the fates in bloody fray,
To toil and struggle through the well-fought day. Pope.
2. A duel; a combat.
Since, if we fall before th' appointed days,
Nature and death continue long their fray. Denham.
The beauller Paris oft desir'd the day
With Sparta's king to meet in single fray. Pope's Iliad.
- TO FRAY. v. a. [from frayer, French.] To fright; to terrify.
The panther, knowing that his spotted hide
Doth please all beasts, but that his looks them frays
Within a bush his dreadful head doth hide,
To let them gaze, whilst he on them may prey. Spenser.
So diversely themselves in vain they fray,
Whilst some more bold to measure him stand nigh. Po. Qy.
Fishes are thought to be frayed with the motion caused by noise upon the water. Bacon's Natural History.
These vultures prey only on carcasses, on such stupid minds as have not life and vigour enough to fray them away. Government of the Tongue.
2. [from frayer, French.] To rub.
FREAK. n. f. [from frach, German, faucy, petulant; frach, Saxon, fugitive.]
1. A sudden and causeless change of place.
2. A sudden fancy; a humour; a whim; a capricious prank.
O! but I fear the fickle freaks, quoth she,
Of fortune, and the odds of arms in field. Fairy Queen.
When that freak has taken possession of a fantastical head, the distemper is incurable. L'Estrange, Fable 100.
She is so restless and peevish that the quarrels with all about her, and sometimes in a freak will instantly change her habitation. Spectator, N^o. 427.

FRE

- To vex me more, he took a freak.
To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.
To FREAK. v. a. [A word, I suppose, Scotch, brought into England by Thomson.] To variegate; to check.
There furry nations harbour:
Sables of glossy black, and dark brown'd,
Or beautiful, freak'd with many a mingled hue. Thomson.
FREAKISH. adj. [from freak.] Capricious; humourful.
It may be a question, whether the wife or the woman was the more freakish of the two; for she was still the same uneasy fop. L'Estrange, Fable 173.
FREAKISHLY. adv. [from freakish.] Capriciously; humoursomerly.
FREAKISHNESS. n. f. [from freakish.] Capriciousness; hu-mourfulness; whimsicalness.

or grunt as a boar. Bailey.
FRECKLE. n. f. [flecke, a spot, German; whence flecke, freckle.]
1. A spot raised in the skin by the sun.
Ruddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue;
Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin. Dryden.
2. Any small spot or discoloration.
The cowlings tall her pensioners be;
In their gold coats spots you see:
Those be rubies fairly favours;
In those freckles live their favours. Sh. Mid. Night's Dream.
The farewell frosts and easterly winds now spot your tulips;
therefore cover such with mats, to prevent freckles. Evelyn.
FRECKLED. adj. [from freckle.] Spotted; maculated; discoloured with small spots.
Sometimes we'll angle at the brook,
The freckled trout to take
With silken worms. Drayton's Cynthia.
The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled cowslip,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Now thy face charms ev'ry shepherd,
Spotted over like a leopard;
And, thy freckled neck display'd,
Envy breeds in ev'ry maid. Swift.
FRECKLY. adj. [from freckle.] Full of freckles.
FRED. The same with peace; upon which our forefathers called their sanctuaries fredstoles, i. e. the seats of peace. So Frederic is powerful, or wealthy in peace; Winfred, victorious peace; Reinfred, sincere peace. Gibson's Camden.
FREE. adj. [Freh, Saxon; ory, Dutch.]
1. At liberty; not a vassal; not enslaved; not a prisoner; not dependent.
Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any conditions of subjection. Temple.
Free, what, and fetter'd with so many chains? Dryden.
How can we think any one freer than to have the power to do what he will? Locke.
This wretched body trembles at your pow'r:
Thus far could fortune; but she can no more:
Free to herself my potent mind remains,
Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains. Prior.
Set an unhappy prisoner free,
Who ne'er intended harm to thee. Prior.
2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.
Their use of meats was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a publick constitution for the ordering of the church. Hooker.
It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent. South.
3. Not bound by fate; not necessitated.
Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell:
Not free, what proof could they have giv'n sincere
Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do, appear'd;
Not what they would? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
4. Permitted; allowed.
Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me as for you? Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure; and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton.
5. Licentious; unrestrained.
O conspiracy!
Sham't thou to shew thy dang'rous brow by night,
When evils are most free? Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Physicians are too free upon the subject, in the conversation of their friends. Felton.
The crickets have been very free in their censures.
I know there are to whole presumptuous thoughts
Those freer beauties, ev'n in them, seem faults. Pope.

6. Open; ingenuous.

'Tis not to make me jealous;
To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well,
Where virtue is, these make more virtuous. Shakespeare's Othello.
Castello, I have doubts within my heart;
Will you be free and candid to your friend? Orway's Orth.
7. Acquainted; conversing without reserve.
Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great slaughter. Hakewill on Providence.
Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe. Prior.
8. Liberal; not parimonious.
Gloster too, a foe to citizens,
O'ercharging your free purses with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
No statute in his favour says,
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend as others spare. Pope's Horace.
Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty: Mr. Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works. Pope.
9. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.
We wanted words to express our thanks: his noble free offers left us nothing to ask. Bacon's New Atlantis.
10. Clear from distress.
Who alone suffers, suffers most 't' th' mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind. Shakespeare's Lear.
11. Guileless; innocent.
Make mad the guilty, and appall the free,
Confound the ignorant. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
My hands are guilty, but my heart is free. Dryden.
12. Exempt.
These
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Who fears not to do ill, yet fears the name;
And free from conscience, is a slave to fame. Denham.
Let envy, then, those crimes within you see,
From which the happy never must be free. Dryden.
Their fteeds around,
Free from the harness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.
The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions. Locke.
13. Invested with franchises; possessing any thing without valsalage; admitted to the privileges of any body.
He therefore makes all birds of every sect
Free of his farm, with promise to respect
Their several kinds alike, and equally protect. Dryden.
Friend!
What do'st thou make a shipboard? To what end
Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
Stark-staring mad, that thou shouldest tempt the sea? Dryden.
14. Without expence; by charity, as a freeshold.
To FREE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to loose.
The child was prisoner to the womb, and is
By law and process of great nature thence Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party of
The anger of the king, nor guilty of
If any be, the trespass of the queen. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down. 2 Mac. ii. 22.
Can't thou no other master understand,
Than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wand? Dryden.
Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
My jav'lin shall revenge so base a part,
And free the soul that quivers in thy heart. Pope.
2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill.
It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniences the passions of those meetings gave him, than to dissolve them. Clarendon.
Hercules
Free'd Erymanthus from the foaming boar.
Our land is from the rage of tygers free'd. Dryden's Virg.
3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.
The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden.
Fierce was the fight; but hast'ning to his prey,
By force the furious lover free'd his way. Dryden.
4. To banish; to send away; to rid.
We may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives. Shakespeare.
5. To exempt.
For he that is dead is free'd from sin. Rom. vi. 7.
6. To unlock; to open.
This master-key
Frees every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryden.
FREEDOM.

FRE

FREEDOM. n. f. [free and body.] A robber; a plunderer;
a pillager.
The Kentishmen, perceiving that Perkin was not followed by any English of name; and that his forces consisted mostly of base people and freedomers, fitter to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom, professed their loyalty to the king. Bacon.
The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or such freedomers as sailed under their commission, taken all the seamen who became prisoners to them of that nation, and bound them back to back, and thrown them overboard into the sea. Clarendon, b. viii.
FREEDOMING. n. f. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.
Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handily in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freedomings, it is his best and surest friend. Spenser.
FREEDOM. n. f. [free and born.] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.
O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freedom brethren of the world! Dryden.
I shall speak my thoughts like a freedom subject, such things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Frenchman durst. Dryden's En. Dedication.
Shall freedom men, in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;
Who from content and custom draw
The flame right to be rul'd by law,
Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.
FREEDOM. n. f. [free and chapel.] Such chapels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chapel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Cowel.
FREEDOM. n. f. [free and cost.] Without expence; free from charges.
We must not vouch any man for an exact matter in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freedom, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing. South's Sermons.
FREEDOM. n. f. [free and man.] A slave manumitted.
Liberty.
The freedom jostles, and will be prefer'd;
First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden's Juo. Sat. 1.
FREEDOM. n. f. [from free.]
1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.
The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spenser on Ireland.
O freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
The privilege of doles; nor yet t' incise
Their names in this or t' other Roman tribe;
That false enfranchisement with ease is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden's Pers.
2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.
By our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakespeare.
3. Power of enjoying franchises.
This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people. Swift.
4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.
I else must change
Their nature, and revoke the high decree
Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall. Milton.
In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. South's Sermons.
5. Unrestraint.
I will that all the feasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Mac. x.
6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.
7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.
FREEDOM. adj. [free and foot.] Not restrained in the march.
We will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too freedomed. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
FREEDOM. adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.
Love must freedomed be, and voluntary;
And not enchanted, or by fate constrain'd. Davies.
FREEDOM. n. f. [free and held.] That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life.
Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure.

FRE

Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or soleland, that is, holden without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowel.
No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record, to be found in some of her majesty's treasuries. Bacon's Office of Alienation.
There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addison's Freeholders, N. 1.
My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.
I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give my own consent.
Swift to Lord Middleton.
FREEDOM. n. f. [from freedom.] One who has a freehold.
As extortion did banish the old English freedomer, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.
FREE. adv. [from free.]
1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependence.
2. Without restraint; lavishly.
If my son were my husband, I would freer rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embraces of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains
I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
3. Without scruple; without reserve.
Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure freely who have written well. Pope's Essay on Crit.
4. Without impediment.
To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Addison's Schoolmaster.
The path to peace is virtue: what I show,
Thyself may freely on thyself bestow:
Fortune was never worshipp'd by the wise;
But, set aloft by fools, usurps the skies. Dryden's Juo. Sat.
5. Without necessity; without predetermination.
Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell.
He leaves us to chuse with the liberty of reasonable beings:
they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Rogers's Sermons.
6. Frankly; liberally.
By nature all things have an equally common use: nature freely and indifferently opens the bosom of the universe to all mankind. South's Sermons.
7. Spontaneously; of its own accord.
FREEMAN. n. f. [free and man.]
1. One not a slave; not a vassal.
Had you rather Caesar were living, and die all slaves, than that Caesar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chusing or doing the worse, be liberty, true liberty, mad men and fools are only the freemen. Locke.
2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.
He made us freemen of the continent,
Whom nature did like captives treat before. Dryden.
What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
FREEMINDED. adj. [free and mind.] Unconstrained; without load of care.
To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting.
Bacon's Essay 31.
FREENESS. n. f. [from free.]
1. The state or quality of being free.
2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuousness; candour.
The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession. Dryden.
3. Generosity; liberality.
I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Spenser.
FREESHOOT. n. f. [free and shoot.] A school in which learning is given without pay.
To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time

time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one fresh-school at least erected in every diocess. Davies.
Two clergymen stood candidates for a small fresh-school in —shire, where a gentleman of interest in the country, who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FRESHPOKEN. adj. [free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courtes as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a free-spoken senator, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.
FRESHSTONE. n. f. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building.

Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.
I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand, a freestone-coloured hand. Shakespeare's As you like it.

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Addison on Italy.

FREETHINKER. n. f. [free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion.

Atheist is an old-fashion'd word: I'm a freethinker, child. Addison's Drummer.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against Christianity? And therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabric must fall to the ground. Swift's Argument against abolishing Christianity.

FREEWILL. n. f. [free and will.]
1. The power of directing our own actions without constraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntaryness; spontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Ezr. vii. 13.

FREEWOMAN. n. f. [free and woman.] A woman not enslaved.

All her ornaments are taken away of a freewoman; she is become a bondslave. Mac. ii. 11.

To FREEZE. v. n. preter. froze. [vroisen, Dutch.]

1. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray on the Creation.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Orpheus with his lute made trees
And mountain tops, that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shaksf. Rich. III.

Heav'n freezes above severe, the clouds congeal,
And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryd.

To FREEZE. v. a. preter. froze; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.

2. To kill by cold.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me.
Ev'n in his garments! Shakespeare's Richard III.

My master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shaksf.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life. Sh. Rom. and Juliet.

Death came on amain,
And exercis'd below his iron reign;
Then upward to the seat of life he goes;
Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.

To FREIGHT. v. a. preter. freighted; part. freighted; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [fretter, French.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.

The princes
Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruel war. Shak. Troilus and Cressida, Prologue.

Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than these,
Who freights a ship to venture on the seas;

FRE

With one frail interposing plank to save
From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryden's Juv.

Freighted with iron, from my native land
I steer my voyage. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.

2. To load as the burthen; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.

I would Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere
It should the good ship have fswallow'd, and
The freighting souls within her. Shakespeare's Tempest.

FREIGHT. n. f.

1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded.

He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight;
The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden's En.

2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FREIGHTER. n. f. [fretteur, French.] He who freights a vessel.

FREN. n. f. A worthless woman. An old word wholly forgotten.

But now from me his madding mind is start,
And woos the widow's daughter of the glen;
And now fair Rosalind hath bred his smart,
So now his friend is changed for a fren. Spenser's Poet.

FRENCH Chalk. n. f.

French chalk is an indurated clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a greyish white colour, variegated with a dusky green. Hill.

French chalk is unctuous to the touch, as leaden is, but harder, and nearer approaching the consistence of stone. Wood.

To FRENCHIFY. v. a. [from French.] To infect with the manner of France; to make a coxcomb.

They mistook nothing more in king Edward the Confessor than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden's Remains.

Has he familiarly dislik'd
Your yellow starch, or said your doubtlet
Was not exactly Frenchified. Shakespeare's As you like it.

FRENETICK. adj. [frenetique, French; Φρενιτικος; generally therefore written phrenetick.] Mad; distracted.

He himself impotent,
By means of his frenetick malady. Daniel's Civil War.

FRENZY. n. f. [Φρενις; phrenitis, Latin: whence phrenetick, phrenetick, phrenzy, or frenzy.] Madness; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness.

That knave, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever governed frenzy. Shaksf. Mer. Wives of Windsor.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;
All else is touring frenzy and distraction. Addison's Cato.

Why such a disposition of the body induceth sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy or frenzy; all this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties. Bent.

FREQUENCY. n. f. [frequentia, Fr. frequentia, Latin.] Crowd; concourse; assembly.

The frequency of degree,
From high to low throughout. Shakespeare's Timon.

He, in full frequency bright
Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake. Paradise Reg.

FREQUENCY. n. f. [frequentia, Latin.]

1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often seen or done.

Should a miracle be indulged to one, others would think themselves equally intitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle; its force and influence would be lost by the frequency of it. Atterb.

2. Concourse; full assembly.

Thou can't e're while into this senate: who
Of such a frequency, so many friends
And kindred thou hast here, saluted thee? Ben. Johnst. Catil.

FREQUENT. adj. [frequent, French; frequens, Latin.]

1. Often done; often seen; often occurring.

An ancient and imperial city falls
The streets are fill'd with frequent funerals. Dryden's En.

Frequent herds shall beset your gates. Pope.

2. Used often to practise any thing.

Every man thinks he may pretend to any employment, provided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself hearty for the government. Swift.

3. Full of concourse.

Frequent and full. Milton.

To FREQUENT. v. a. [frequentia, Latin; frequentare, French.]

To visit often; to be much in any place; to resort often to.

Latter day,
Finding in it fit ports for fishers trade,
'Gan more the same frequent, and further to invade. F. & Q.

There were synagogues for men to resort unto; our Saviour himself, and after him the apostles, frequented them. Hooker, b. v. f. 11.

This fellow here, this thy creature,
By night frequents my house. Shakespeare's Timon.

At

FRE

At that time this land was known and frequented by the ships and vessels. Bacon.

With tears
Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milt. P. L.

To serve my friends, the senate I frequent;
And there what I before digested, vent. Denham.

That he frequented the court of Augustus, and was well received in it, is most undoubted. Dryden's Ovid, Preface.

FREQUENTABLE. adj. [from frequent.] Conversable; accessible. A word not now used, but not inelegant.

While youth lasted in him, the exercises of that age and his humour, not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable and less dangerous. Sidney, b. ii.

FREQUENTATIVE. adj. [frequentativus, French; frequentativus, Latin.] A grammatical term applied to verbs signifying the frequent repetition of an action.

FREQUENTER. n. f. [from frequent.] One who often resorts to any place.

Persons under bad imputations are no great frequenters of churches. Swift.

FREQUENTLY. adv. [frequentius, Latin.] Often; commonly; not rarely; not seldom; a considerable number of times; manifold times.

I could not, without much grief, observe how frequently both gentlemen and ladies are at a loss for questions and answers. Swift's Introduction to Gentel Conversation.

FRESCO. n. f. [Italian.]

1. Coolness; shade; duskiness, like that of the evening or morning.

Hellish sprites
Love more the fresco of the nights. Prior.

2. A picture not drawn in glaring light, but in dusk.

Here thy well-study'd marbles fix our eye;
A fading fresco here demands a sigh. Pope.

FRESH. adj. [fresh, Saxon; fraiches, French.]

1. Cool; not rapid with heat.

I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast;
The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring,
And draw thy water from the freshest spring. Prior.

2. Not salt.

They keep themselves unmixed with the salt water; so that, a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land. Abbot's Des. of the World.

3. New; not impaired by time.

This second source of men, while yet but few,
And while the dread of judgment past remain
Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,
With some regard to what's just and right,
Shall lead their lives. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

That love which first was set, will first decay;
Mine of a fresh date will longer stay. Dryd. Indian Emp.

4. In a state like that of recollection.

We will revive those times, and in our memories
Preserve and still keep fresh, like flowers in water. Denham.

With such a care
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

Thou sun, said I, fair light!
And thou enlighten'd earth, fo fresh and gay! Milt. P. L.

5. Recent; newly come.

Amidst the spirits Palinurus press'd;
Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest. Dryden's En.

Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place;
Stiff in denial, as the law appoints,
On engines they defend their tortur'd joints. Dryden.

6. Repaired from any loss or diminution.

Nor lies the long; but, as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain;
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

7. Florid; vigorous; cheerful; undimmed; unimpaired.

This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him: take order that when he is dead there be chosen a pope of fresh years, between fifty and threescore. Bacon's holy War.

Two swains,
Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair. Pope.

8. Healthy in countenance; ruddy.

Tell me,
Hast thou beheld a fresh gentlewoman,
Such war of white and red within her cheeks? Shakespeare.

It is no rare observation in England to see a fresh coloured lusty young man yoked to a consumptive female, and him soon after attending her to the grave. Harvey on Consumptions.

They represent to themselves a thousand poor, tall, innocent, fresh coloured young gentlemen. Addison's Spectator.

9. Brisk; strong; vigorous.

As a fresh gale of wind fills the sails of a ship. Holder.

10. Fastidious; opposed to eating or drinking. A low word.

11. Sweet: opposed to stale or stinking.

FRE

FRESH. n. f. Water not salt.

He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not shew him
Where the quick freshes are. Shakespeare's Tempest.

To FRESHEN. v. a. [from fresh.] To make fresh.

Prelusive drops let all their moisture flow
In large effusion o'er the freshen'd world. Thomson's Spring.

To FRESHEN. v. n. To grow fresh.

A freshening breeze the magick power supply'd;
While the wing'd vessel flew along the tide. Pope's Odyssey.

FRESHET. n. f. [from fresh.] A pool of fresh water.

All fill from sea or shore,
Freshet or purling brook, or shell or fin. Milt. Parad. Lost.

FRESHLY. adv. [from fresh.]

1. Coolly.

2. Newly; in the former state renewed.

The weeds of heresy being grown unto such ripeness as that was, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterwards freshly spring up again, no less pernicious than at the first. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouth as household words,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shak. Hen. V.

They are now freshly in difference with them. Bacon.

3. With a healthy look; ruddily.

Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled? Shaksf.

FRESHNESS. n. f. [from fresh.]

1. Newness; vigour; spirit; the contrary to vapidity.

Most odours smell best broken or crushed; but flowers pressed or beaten, do lose the freshness and sweetness of their odour. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Freedom from diminution by time; not staleness.

For the constant freshness of it, it is such a pleasure as can never cloy or overwork the mind; for surely no man was ever weary of thinking that he had done well or virtuously. South.

3. Freedom from fatigue; newness of strength.

The Scots had the advantage both for number and freshness of men. Hayward.

4. Coolness.

There are some rooms in Italy and Spain for freshness, and gathering the winds and air in the heats of Summer; but they be but pennings of the winds, and enlarging them again, and making them reverberate in circles. Bacon.

Say, if she please, she hither may repair,
And breathe the freshness of the open air. Dryden's Aureng.

She laid her down to rest,
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air. Addison on Italy.

5. Ruddiness; colour of health.

The secret venom, circling in her veins,
Works through her skin, and bursts in bloating stains;
Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face. Granville.

6. Freedom from saltiness.

FRESHWATER. [A compound word of fresh and water, used as an adjective.] Raw; unskilled; unacquainted. A low term borrowed from the sailors, who stigmatise those who come first to sea as freshwater men or novices.

The nobility, as freshwater soldiers which had never seen but some light skirmishes, in their vain bravery made light account of the Turks. Knolles's History of the Turks.

FRET. n. f. [Of this word the etymology is very doubtful: some derive it from freter, to eat; others from freteran, to adorn; some from freter; Skinner more probably from fretum, or the French fretille: perhaps it comes immediately from the Latin fratum.]

1. A frith, or strait of the sea, where the water by confinement is always rough.

Euripus generally signifieth any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores. Brown's Vulg. Errours.

2. Any agitation of liquors by fermentation, confinement, or other cause.

The channel of this river is white with rocks, and the surface covered with froth and bubbles; for it runs along upon the fret, and is still breaking against the stones that oppose its passage. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

The blood in a fever, if well governed, like wine upon the fret, dischargeth itself of all heterogeneous mixtures. Derham's Physico-Theology.

3. That stop of the musical instrument which causes or regulates the vibrations of the string.

It requirerh good winding of a string before it will make any note; and in the tops of lutes, &c. the higher they go, the less distance is between the frats. Bacon's Nat. History.

The harp
Had work, and rest not: the solemn pipe
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,
All sounds on fret by string or golden wire,
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice Choral or union. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

They are fitted to answer the most variable harmony: two or

FRE

or three pipes to all those of a church-organ, or to all the strings and frets of a lute. Grew's Cosmolog. Sac. b. i.

4. Work rising in protuberances.
The frets of houses, and all equal figures, please; whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon's Natural History.
We take delight in a prospect well laid out, and diversified with fields and meadows, woods and rivers, in the curious fret works of rocks and grottos. Spectator, N^o. 414.

5. Agitation of the mind; commotion of the temper; passion.
Calmness is great advantage: he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets, Herbert.
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire.

The incredulous Pheac, having yet
Drank but one round, reply'd in sober f. et. Tate's Juven.
You, too weak the slightest loss to bear,
Are on the fret of passion, boil and rage. Crech's Juven.
Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret;
I never answer'd, I was not in debt. Pope, Epistle ii.

To FRET, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rub against any thing; to agitate violently.
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakespeare.

2. To wear away by rubbing.

Drop them still upon one place,
'Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth. Shakespeare's Richard II.
In the banks of rivers, with the waining of the water,
there were divers times fretted out big pieces of gold. Abbot.
Before I ground the object metal on the pitch, I always ground the putty on it with the concave copper, 'till it had done making a noise; because, if the particles of the putty were not made to flick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes. Newton's Opt.

3. To hurt by attrition.

The better part with Mary and with Ruth Chosen thou hast; and they that over-ween,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee, but pity and ruth. Milton.

4. To corrode; to eat away.
It is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without. Lev. xiii. 55.

The painful husband, plowing up his ground,
Shall find all fret with rust, both pikes and shields,
And empty helms under his harrow found. Hakewill.

5. To form into raised work.

Nor did there want
Cornice or freeze, with bossy sculptures grav'n;
The roof was fretted gold. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

6. To variegate; to diversify.

Yon grey lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shak. Jul. Cas.

7. To make angry; to vex.

Antony
Is valiant and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope and fear
Of what he has and has not. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Because thou hast fretted me in all these things, behold I will recompense thy way upon thine head. Ezek. xvi. 43.
Such an expectation, cries one, will never come to pass:
therefore I'll even give it up, and go and fret myself. Collier.
Injuries from friends fret and gall more, and the memory of them is not so easily obliterated. Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

To FRET, v. n.

1. To be in commotion; to be agitated.
No benefits whatsoever shall ever alter or allay that diabolical rancour, that frets and ferments in some hellish breasts, but that upon all occasions it will foam out at its foul mouth in slander and invective. South's Sermons.

Th' adjoining brook, that purls along
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,
Now scarcely moving through a reedy pool. Thomf. Summ.

2. To be worn away; to be corroded.

Take a piece of gloves leather that is very thin, and put your gold therein, binding it close, and then hang it up: the sal armonick will fret away, and the gold remain behind. Peachment on Drawing.

3. To make way by attrition.

These do but indeed scrape off the extuberances, or fret into the wood, and therefore they are very seldom used to soft wood. Mason's Mech. Exerc.

It inflamed and swelled very much; many wheals arose, and fretted one into another with great excoriation. Wisenan.

4. To be angry; to be peevish; to vex himself.

They trouble themselves with fretting at the ignorance of such as withstand them in their opinion. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.
We are in a fretting mind at the church of Rome, and with angry disposition enter into cogitation. Hooker.

Helpless, what may it boot

Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are. Sh. Macb.

His heart fretted against the Lord. Prov. xix. 3.

Hudibras fretting

Conquest should be so long a getting.

Drew up his force. Hudibras, b. i. cant. 2.

He swells with wrath, he makes outrageous moan,

He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground. Dryd.

How should I fret to mangle ev'ry line,

In reverence to the fins of thirty-nine. Pope.

FRETFUL, adj. [from fret.] Angry; peevish; in a state of vexation.

Thy knotty and combined locks to part,

And each particular hair to stand on end,

Like quills upon the fretful porcupine. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Where's the king?

—Contending with the fretful elements;

Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea. Shaksp. K. Lear.

They are extremely fretful and peevish, never well at rest;

but always calling for this or that, or changing their posture of lying or sitting. Harvey on Consumption.

Are you positive and fretful?

Heedless, ignorant, forgetful? Swift.

FRETFULLY, adv. [from fretful.] Peevishly.

FRETFULNESS, n. f. [from fretful.] Passion; peevishness.

FRETTRY, adj. [from fret.] Adorned with raised work.

FRIABILITY, n. f. [from friable.] Capacity of being reduced to powder.

Hardness, friability, and power to draw iron, are qualities to be found in a loadstone. Lacite.

FRIABLE, adj. [friable, French; friabilis, Latin.] Easily crumbled; easily reduced to powder.

A spongy excrecence growth upon the roots of the lafer tree, and sometimes on cedar, very white, light, and friable, which we call agarick. Bacon's Natural History.

The liver, of all the viscera, is the most friable, and easily crumbled or dissolved. Arbutnot on Diet.

FRIAR, n. f. [A corruption of frere, French.] A religious;

a brother of some regular order.

Holy Franciscan friar! brother! ho! Sh. Rom. and Jul.

All the priests and friars in my realm,

Shall in procession sing her endless praise. Shakespeare, H. VI.

He says he's but a friar, but he's big enough to be a pope.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

Many jesuits and friars went about, in the disguise of Pres-biterian and Independent ministers, to preach up rebellion. Swift.

A friar would needs shew his talent in Latin. Swift.

FRIARLIKE, adj. [from friar.] Monastick; unkill'd in the world.

Their friarlike general would the next day make one holy-day in the Christian calendars, in remembrance of thirty thousand Hungarian martyrs slain of the Turks. Kneller's History.

FRIARLY, adv. [friar and like.] Like a friar, or man untaught in life.

Seek not proud riches, but such as thou may'st get justly, use soberly, distribute cheerfully, and leave contentedly; yet have no abstract nor friarlike contempt of them. Bacon's Essay.

FRIARSCOWL, n. f. [friar and cowl.] A plant.

It agrees with the dragon and arum, from both which it differs only in having a flower resembling a cowl.

FRIARY, n. f. [from friar.] A monastery or convent of friars.

FRIARY, adj. Like a friar.

Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow when he had sweetly invented to signify his name, St. Francis, with a friary cowl in a cornfield. Camden's Remains.

To FRIABLE, v. n. To trifle.

Though cheats, yet more intelligible

Than those that with the stars do fribble. Hudibras, p. ii.

FRIABLE, n. f. [from the verb.] A trifle.

A fribbler is one who professes rapture for the woman, and dreads her consent. Spectator, N^o. 288.

FRICASSEE, n. f. [French.] A dish made by cutting chickens or other small things in pieces, and dressing them with strong sauce.

Oh, how would Homer praise their dancing dogs,

Their stinking cheese, and fricacy of frogs!

He'd raise no tables, sing no fragrant lye,

Of boys with custard choak'd at Newberry. King.

FRICTION, n. f. [frictio, Latin.] The act of rubbing one thing against another.

Gentle friction draweth forth the nourishment, by making the parts a little hungry, and heating them: this friction I wish to be done in the morning. Bacon's Natural History.

Refinuous or uncious bodies, and such as will flame, burst vigorously, and melt thereof without friction, as good hard war,

FRI

wax, which will convert the needle almost as actively as the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 4.

FRICTION, n. f. [frictio, Fr. frictio, from frico, Latin.]

1. The act of rubbing two bodies together.

Do not all bodies which abound with terrestrial parts, and especially with sulphureous ones, emit light as often as those parts are sufficiently agitated, whether the agitation be made by heat, friction, percussion, putrefaction, or by any vital motion? Newton's Opt.

2. The resistance in machines caused by the motion of one body upon another.

Medical rubbing with the fleshbrush or cloaths.

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full, as we see both in men and in the currying of horses; for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits to the parts. Bacon.

FRI'DAY, n. f. [frige dæg, Saxon.] The sixth day of the week, so named of Freya, a Saxon deity.

An' she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

For Venus, like her day, will change her cheer, Dryden.

And seldom shall we see a Friday clear.

FRIEND, n. f. [friend, Dutch; friend, Saxon.] This word, with its derivatives, is pronounced friend, friendly: the i totally neglected.

1. One joined to another in mutual benevolence and intimacy: opposed to foe or enemy.

Friends of my foul, you twain

Rule in this realm, and the god's state sustain. Shakespeare.

Some man is a friend for his own occasion, and will not abide in the day of thy trouble. Ecclus. vi. 8.

God's benison go with you, and with those

That would make good of bad, and friends of foes. Shakespeare.

Wonder not to see this foul extend

The bounds, and seek some other self, a friend. Dryden.

2. One without hostile intentions.

Who comes to fast in silence of the night?

—A friend.

—What friend? your name? Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.

3. One reconciled to another: this is put by the custom of the language somewhat irregularly in the plural number.

He's friends with Caesar.

In fate of health thou say'st, and thou say'st free. Shakespeare.

My son came then into my mind; and yet my mind

Was then scarce friends with him. Shak. King Lear.

4. An attendant, or companion.

The king ordains their entrance, and ascends

His regal seat, surrounded by his friends. Dryden's Æn.

5. Favourer; one propitious.

Aurora riding upon Pegasus, sheweth her swiftnefs, and how she is a friend to poetry and all ingenious inventions. Peachment.

6. A familiar compellation.

Friends, how camest thou in hither? Mat. xxii. 12.

What supports me, do'st thou ask?

The confidence, friends, I have lost mine eyes o'erly'd

In liberty's defence. Milton.

To FRIEND, v. a. [from the noun.] To favour; to befriend;

to countenance; to support.

I know that we shall have him well to friend. Shakespeare.

When vice makes mercy, mercy's to be extended,

That, for the fault's love, is th' offender friended. Shakespeare.

FRIENDLESS, adj. [from friend.]

1. Wanting friends; wanting support; without countenance; destitute; forlorn.

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless. Shak. H. VIII.

Woe to him that is alone, is verified upon none so much as upon the friendless person. South's Sermons.

To some new climate, or to thy native sky,

Oh friendless and forsaken virtue fly. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

To what new climate, what distant sky,

Forsaken, friendless, will ye fly?

Say, will ye blest the bleak Atlantick shore,

Or bid the furious Gaul be rude no more? Pope.

2. FRIENDLESS Man. The Saxon word for him whom we call an outlaw, because he was, upon his exclusion from the king's peace and protection, denied all help of friends.

FRIENDLINESS, n. f. [from friendly.]

1. A disposition to friendship.

Such a liking and friendliness as hath brought forth the effects. Sidney.

2. Exertion of benevolence.

Let all the intervals be employed in prayers, charity, friendliness and neighbourhood, and means of spiritual and corporal health. Taylor's Rule of holy living.

FRIENDLY, adj. [from friend.]

1. Having the temper and disposition of a friend; kind; favourable; benevolent.

They gave them thanks, desiring them to be friendly still unto them. 2 Mac. xii. 31.

And guide the prosperous mariner

With everlasting beams of friendly light. Prior.

2. Disposed to union.

Like friendly colours found our hearts unite,

And each from each contract new strength and light. Pope.

3. Salutory; homogeneal.

Not that Nepentes, which the wife of Thone

In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena,

Is of such power to stir up joy as this,

FRI

- The mind *fright*s itself with any thing reflected on in grofs, and at a distance: things thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty. Locke.
- Whence glaring oft with many a broaden'd orb,
He *fright*s the nations. Thomson's Autumn.
- FRIGHT, n. f. [from the verb.] A sudden terror.
You, if your goodness does not plead my cause,
May think I broke all hospitable laws,
To bear you from your palace-yard by might,
And put your noble person in a fright. Dryden.
- TO FRIGHTEN, v. a. To terrify; to shock with dread.
The rugged bears, or spotted lynx's brood,
Frighten the valleys and infest the wood. Prior.

Don't I look frightfully to-day? Swift.
- FRIGHTFULNESS, n. f. [from frightful.] The power of impressing terror.
FRIGID, adj. [from frigidus, Latin.]
1. Cold; without warmth. In this sense it is seldom used but in science.
In the torrid zone the heat would have been intolerable, and in the frigid zones the cold would have destroyed both animals and vegetables. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
2. Without warmth of affection.
3. Impotent; without warmth of body.
4. Lull; without fire of fancy.
If justice Phillip's covise head
Some frigid rhymes disburles,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.
- FRIGIDITY, n. f. [from frigiditas, Latin.]
1. Coldness; want of warmth.
2. Dulness; want of intellectual fire.
Driving at these as at the highest elegancies, which are but the frigidities of wit. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i. c. 9.
Of the two extremes, one would sooner pardon phrenzy than frigidity. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.
3. Want of corporeal warmth.
The boiling blood of youth agitating the fluid air, hinders that serenity which is necessary to so severe an intentness; and the frigidity of decrepit age is as much its enemy, by reason of its dulling moisture. Glanv. Scaph. c. 14.
4. Coldness of affection.
FRIGIDLY, adv. [from frigid.] Coldly; dully; without affection.
FRIGIDNESS, n. f. [from frigid.] Coldness; dulness; want of affection.
FRIGORIFICK, adj. [from frigorificus, frigus and facio, Lat.] Causing cold. A word used in science.

Whose works are o'en the frittery of wit;
From brocade is become so bold a thief,
As we, the robb'd, leave rage, and pity it. Ben. Johnson.
- The fighting-place now searces rags supply,
And all the tackling is a frittery. Davie.
- Ragfair is a place near the Tower of London, where old cloaths and frittery are sold. Notes to Pope's Dunciad.
- TO FRISK, v. n. [from frizzare, Italian.]
1. To leap; to skip.
Put water into a glass, and wet your finger, and draw it round about the lip of the glass, pressing it somewhat hard; and after drawing it some few times about, it will make the water frisk and sprinkle up in a fine dew. Eaton's Nat. Hist.
- The fish tell a frisking in the net. L'Estrange's Rabbs.
- Whether every one hath experimented this troublesome intrusion of some frisking ideas, which thus importune the understanding, and hinder it from being better employed, I know not. Locke.
2. To dance in frolic or gaiety.
We are as twin'd lamb, that did frisk i' th' fun,
And bleat the one at the other: what we chang'd,
Was innocence for innocence; we knew not
The doctrine of ill-doing. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
- About them frisking play'd
All beasts of th' earth. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

- Sly hunters thus, in Borneo's ile,
To catch a monkey by a wife,
The mimic animal amuse;
They place before him gloves and shoes;
Which when the brute puts aukward on,
All his agility is gone:
In vain to frisk or climb he tries;
The huntsmen seize the grinning prize. Swift.
- FRISK, n. f. [from the verb.] A frolic; a fit of wanton gaiety.
FRISKER, n. f. [from frisk.] A wanton; one not constant or settled.
Now I will wear this, and now I will wear that;
Now I will wear I cannot tell what:
All new fashions be pleasant to me:
Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;
What should I do but bet cock on the hoop? Camden.
- FRISKINESS, n. f. [from frisk.] Gaiety; liveliness. A low word.
FRISKY, adj. [from frisque, French, from frisk.] Gay; airy. A low word.

The frith, or haul his cables from the shore? Dryd. Virg.
- Batavian fleets
Defraud us of the glittering finny swarms
That heave our friths, and crowd upon our shores. Thomson.
2. A kind of net. I know not whether this sense be now retained.
The Wear is a frith, reaching through the Ose, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt or cod with an eye-hook; where the fish entering, upon their coming back with the ebb, are stopp'd from issuing out again. Carew.
- FRITILLARY, n. f. [from fritillaire, French.] A plant.
The flower consists of six leaves, and is of the bell-shaped lily flowers, pendulous, naked, and, for the most part, chequered: the style of the flower becomes an oblong fruit, divided into three cells, and filled with flat seeds, lying in a double row: the root consists of two fleshy knobs, for the most part semi-globular, betwixt which arises the flower-stalk. Miller.
- FRITINANCY, n. f. [from fritinam, Latin.] The scream of an insect, as the cricket or cicada.
The note or fritinancy thereof is far more shrill than that of the locust, and its life short. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- FRITTER, n. f. [from friture, French.]
1. A small piece cut to be fried.
Maids, fritters and pancakes ynow see ye make;
Let Slut have one pancake for company fake. Tuff. Husb.
2. A fragment; a small piece. Senfe

FRO

- Sense and putter! have I lived to stand in the taunt of one that makes fritters of English! Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.
- If you strike a solid body that is brittle, as glass or sugar, it breaketh not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about into shivers and fritters; the motion, upon the pressure, searching all ways, and breaking where it findeth the body weakest. Bacon's Natural History.
- The ancient errant knights
Won all their ladies hearts in fights;
And cut whole giants into fritters,
To put them into amorous twitters. Hudibras, p. iii.
3. A cheescake; a wigg. Anfworth.
- TO FRITTER, v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To cut meat into small pieces to be fried.
2. To break into small particles or fragments.
Joy to great chaos! let division reign!
My racks and tortures soon shall drive them hence,
Break all their nerves, and preface all their sense. Dunciad.
- How prologues into prefaces decay,
And the notes are fritter'd quite away. Pope's Dunciad.
- FRIVOLOUS, adj. [from frivulus, Latin; frivole, Fr.] Slight; trifling; of no moment.
It is frivulous to say we ought not to use bad ceremonies of the church of Rome, and presume all such bad as it pleaseth themselves to dislike. Hobbs, b. iv. f. 4.
- These seem very frivulous and fruitless; for, by the breach of them, little damage can come to the commonwealth. Spenser.
- She tam'd the blinded lions,
And spotted mountain pard; but set at nought
The frivulous bolt of Cupid. Milton.
- Those things which now seem frivulous and slight,
Will be of serious consequence to you,
When they have made you once ridiculous. Reform.
- All the impeachments in Greece and Rome seem to have agreed in a notion they had of being concerned, in point of honour, to condemn whatever person they impeach'd, however frivulous the articles, or however weak the surmises, whereon they were to proceed in their proofs. Swift.
- I will not defend any mistake, and do not think myself obliged to answer every frivulous objection. Arbutnot.
- FRIVOLOUSNESS, n. f. [from frivulous.] Want of importance; triflingness.
FRIVOLOUSLY, adv. [from frivulous.] Triflingly; without weight.

- FRIZLER, n. f. [from frizor.] One that makes short curls.
PRO, adv. [of pro, Saxon.]
1. Backward; regressively. It is only used in opposition to the word to, and pro, backward and forward.
The Carthaginians, in all the long Punick war, having spoiled all Spain, rooted out all that were affected to the Romans; and the Romans, having recovered that country, did cut off all that favoured the Carthaginians; so betwixt them both, to and pro, there was scarce a native Spaniard left. Spens.
- As when a heap of gather'd thorns is cast,
Now to, now pro, before th' autumnal blast,
Together clung, it rolls around the field. Pope's Odyssey.
2. It is a contraction of from: not now used.
They turn round like grindstones,
Which they dig out pro the delves,
For their bairns bread, wives and selves. Ben. Johnson.
- FROCK, n. f. [from frac, French.]
1. A dress; a coat.
That monster, custom, is angel yet in this,
That to the use of actions fair and good,
He likewise gives a frock or livery,
That aply is put on. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser's Pastoral.
- FROST. n. f. [froste, Saxon.]
1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.
This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
When the frost seizes upon wine, only the more waterish parts are congealed: there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. Saunders's Sermons.
2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.
Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost. Pope's Winter.

sion; as a horse that is shod with frostnails. Greav's Cofinal.
- FROSTWORK. n. f. [frost and work.] Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew congealed upon shrubs.
By nature shap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful rain, and these the hail compose;
The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these,
Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze. Blackmore.
- FROSTY. adj. [from frost.]
1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.
For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,
Be pitiful to my condemned sons. Shakespeare, Titus Andronicus.
The air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire scorseth in frosty weather. Lucan.
A gnat, half starved with cold and hunger, went out one frosty morning to a bee-hive. L'Estrange.
2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.
What a frosty spirited rogue is this! Shakespeare, Henry IV.

If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth? Shak. H. VI.
- FROTH. n. f. [froze, Danish and Scottish.]
1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.
His hideous tail then hurled he about,
And therewith all enwrap the nimble thighs
Of his froth foamy steed. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 11.
When wind exspireth from under the sea, as it causeth some refounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon's Nat. History.
Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew;
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton's Pa. Reg.
The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters. Glav. Steph. c. 9.
- 9 X

FRO

The scatter'd ocean flies;
Black sands, discolour'd froth, and mingled mud arise. Dry.
They were the froth my raging folly mov'd
When it boil'd up; I knew not then I lov'd, Yet then lov'd most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth; and after that froth has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the several bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white, with a perfect whiteness.

Newton's Opt.
A painter, having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose froth about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Any empty or senseless show of wit or eloquence.
3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.
Who eateth his veal, pig and lamb being froth,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth. Tuff. Husb.
To FROTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To foam; to throw out spume; to generate spume.

He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

FROTHILY. adv. [from frothy.]

1. With foam; with spume.

2. In an empty trifling manner.

FROTHY. adj. [from froth.]

1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of differing natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.

Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

2. Soft; not solid; waiting.

Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frothy. Bacon's Natural History.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.

What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments?
What is it but a mortification, to a man of sense and virtue? L'Estrange, Fable 185.

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Tillotson's Sermon 1.

PROUNCE. n. f. A word used by falconers for a distemper, in which white pittle gathers about the hawk's bill.

To FROUNCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fizzle or curl the hair about the face. This word was at first probably used in contempt.

Some frounce their curled hair in courtly guise,
Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 4.

Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buskin, or an overfaring frounced head. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Thus, night, oft see me in thy pale career,
Not trick'd and frounc'd as the was wont,
With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton.

FROUZY. adj. [A cant word.] Dim; foetid; muffy.

Petticoats in frouzy heaps.

When first Diana leaves her bed,
Vapours and steams her looks disgrace;
A frouzy dirty-colour'd red
Sits on her cloudy wrinkled face. Swift.

FROWARD. adj. [Froward, Saxon.] Peevish; ungovernable; angry; perverse: the contrary to forward.

The froward pain of mine own heart made me so delight to punish him, whom I esteemed the chiefest let in the way. Sidney.

She's not froward, but modest as the dove;
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn. Shakespeare.

Whole ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths. Prov. ii. 15.

Time moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation. Bacon, Essay 25.

'Tis with froward men, and froward fashions too, as 'tis with froward children; they'll be sooner quieted by fear than by any sense of duty. L'Estrange.

They help or occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles.

FROWARDLY. adv. [from froward.] Peevishly; perversely.

I hid me and was wroth, and he went frowardly in the way of his heart. Jc. vii. 17.

FRU

FRO'WARDNESS. n. f. [from froward.] Peevishness; perverseness.

How many frowardnesses of ours does he smother? how many indignities does he pass by? how many affronts does he put up at our hands? South's Sermons.

We'll mutually forget

The warmth of youth and frowardness of age. Addis. Cato.

FRO'WER. n. f. [I know not the etymology.] A cleaving tool.

A frower of iron for cleaving of lath,

With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry hath. Tiss. Husb.

To FROWN. v. a. [Frown, old French, to wrinkle. Skinner.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.

Say, that she frowns; I'll say, she looks as clear

As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakespeare.

They chafe their magistrat;

And such a one as he, who puts his snail,

His popular snail, against a graver bench

Than ever frown'd. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet on? You are too much of late 't' frown.

—Thou wait a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.

The wood,

Whose shady horrors on a rising brow

Wav'd high, and frown'd upon the stream below. Pope.

FROWN. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.

Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour. Knelley's History of the Turks.

In his half-clos'd eyes

Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;

His front yet threatens, and his frowns command. Prior.

FROWNINGLY. adv. [from frown.] Sternly; with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?

—A countenance more in sorrow than in anger. Shak. Ham.

FROWY. adj. Muffy; mossy. This word is now not used;
but instead of it frowzy.

But if they with thy gages should yede,

They soon might be corrupted;

Or like not of the frowy fide,

Or with the weeds be glutted. Spenser's Pastoral.

FROZEN. part. pass. of freeze.

Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in despair;

but his armour so naturally representing ice, and all his furniture so lively answering thereto, as yet did I never see anything that pleased me better. Sidney, b. ii.

How dire a tempest from Mycenæ pour'd,
Our plains, our temples, and our town devour'd:

What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms

Shook Asia's crown with European arms;

Ev'n such have heard, if any such there be,
Whole earth is bounded by the frozen sea. Dryden's Ene.

Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth

T' invade the frozen waggon of the North. Dryd. Ovid.

A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire

They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire.

F. R. S. Fellow of the Royal Society.

Who this professes,

FRO'CTIFEROUS. adj. [Froctifer, Latin.] Bearing fruit. Ans.

To FRUCTIFY. v. a. [fructifier, French.] To make fruitful; to fertilize.

The legal levies the sovereign raises, are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth. Hovel's Vocal Purs.

Where e'er she looks, behold some sudden birth

Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth. Granville.

To FRUCTIFY. v. n. To bear fruit.

It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh

the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage;

and serveth as a most approved remedy against all sinful and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life. Hake.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles. Brown's Vulg. Errours, b. ii.

FRUCTIFICATION. n. f. [from fructify.] The act of causing or of bearing fruit; fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the Spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch-tree, hath slender reason to doubt. Brown's Vulg. Errours, b. ii.

FRUCTUOUS. adj. [fructuosus, Fr. from fructify.] Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.

Here to the fight

Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn

Oft interlac'd occur; and both imbibe

Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,

So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound! Phillips.

FRUGAL

FRU

FRUGAL. adj. [frugalit, Latin; frugal, Fr.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.

If through mists he shoots his flutten beams,

Frugal of lights, in loofe and straggling beams,

Suspect a drilling day. Dryden's Virgil's Georgicks.

FRUGALLY. adv. [from frugal.] Parsimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.

Mean time young Pafimond his marriage prefs'd,

And frugally resolv'd, the charge to thum, Dryden.

To join his brother's bridal with his own.

FRUGALITY. n. f. [frugalit, French; frugalitas, Latin.]

Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.

As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink.

Frugality and bounty too,

Those diff'ring virtues, meet in you. Waller.

In this frugality of your praises, some things I cannot omit. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines: it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony. Arbutnot's Join L'ud.

FRUGIFEROUS. adj. [frugifer, Latin.] Bearing fruit. Ans.

FRUIT. n. f. [fruitus, Latin; fruit, French.] Fruit, French.

1. The product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,

And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of balser quality. Shaksp. Henry V.

2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.

By tasting of that fruit forbids,

Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.

See how the rising fruits the gardens crown,

Imbibe the sun, and make his light their own. Blackmore.

3. Production.

The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness and righteousness, and truth. Ez. v. 9.

4. The offspring of the womb; the young of any animal.

Can't thou their reckonings keep? the time compute,

When their swollen bellies shall enlarge their fruit. Sandys.

5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.

What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories?

Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity? Swift.

Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

6. The effect or consequence of any action.

She blushed when she considered the effect of granting; she was pale, when she remembered the fruits of denying. Sidney.

They shall eat of the fruit of their own way. Prov. i. 31.

If I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labour. Phillips.

FRUITAGE. n. f. [fruitage, French.] Fruit collectively; various fruits.

In heav'n the trees

Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines

Yield nectar. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Greedily they pluck'd

The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew

Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flam'd. Milton.

What is more ordinary with them than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garnishing of their work? More.

FRUITBEARER. n. f. [fruit and bearer.] That which produces fruit.

Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often infected with the measles. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FRUITBEARING. adj. [fruit and bear.] Having the quality of producing fruit.

By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not. Mort. Husbandry.

FRUITERER. n. f. [fruitier, French.] One who trades in fruit.

I did fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's inn. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

Walnuts the fruiterer's hand in Autumn stain;

Blue plums and juicy pears augment his gain. Gay.

FRUITERY. n. f. [fruiterie, French.]

1. Fruit collectively taken.

Oft, notwithstanding all thy care

To help thy plants, on the small fertility

Exempt from ills, an oriental blast

Disastrous flies. Phillips.

2. A fruit-loft; a repository for fruit.

FRUITFUL. adj. [fruit and full.]

1. Ferti e; abundantly productive; liberal of product.

If the continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence. Sidney, b. ii.

2. Actually bearing fruit.

Adonis' gardens,

That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next. Shaksp.

FRU

3. Prolifick; childbearing; not barren.

Hear, nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father!

Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend

To make this creature fruitful: Shakespeare's King Lear.

Into her womb convey sterility.

I have copied nature, making the youths amorous and the dameless fruitful. Gay's Preface to the What d'ye Call it.

4. Plenteous; abounding in any thing.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,

And from Britannia's publick posts retire,

Me into foreign realms my late conveys, Addison.

Through nations fruitful of immortal lays.

FRUITFULLY. adv. [from fruitful.]

1. In such a manner as to be prolific.

How sacred seeds of sea, and air, and earth,

And purer fire through universal night,

And empty space, did fruitfully unite. Roscommon.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.

You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered. Shaksp.

FRUITFULNESS. n. f. [from fruitful.]

1. Fertility; fecundity; plentiful production.

Neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the flood. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

2. The quality of being prolific.

The goddess, present at the match she made,

So bless'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,

That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,

To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryd. Ovid.

3. Exuberant abundance.

The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary: I will like a'd praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues in, I cannot but justly hate him for. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.

FRUITGROVES. n. f. [fruit and groves.] Shades, or close

FRY

Lady, by yonder blessed moon I vow,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops. Shakespeare.
They took strong cities, possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards and oliveyards, and fruit-trees in abundance. Neb. ix. 25.
All with a border of rich fruit-trees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound. Wallr.

To FRUMP. v. a. To mock; to browbeat. Shinner. Ausfu.
To FRUSH. v. a. [fruiser, French.] To break, bruise, or crush. Hammer.
I like thy armour well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
FRUSH. n. f. [from the verb.] A sort of tender horn that grows in the middle of the sole, and at some distance from the toe: it divides into two branches, running towards the heel, in the form of a fork. Farrier's Dict.
FRUSTRANEUS. adj. [frustra, Latin.] Vain; useless; unprofitable; without advantage.
Their attempts being so frustraneous, and the demonstrations to the contrary so peripetuous, it is a marvel that any man, virtuously and piously disposed, should be so partially and zealously affected in a cause that has neither truth nor any honest usefulness in it. More's Divine Dialogues.
He timely withdraws his frustraneous baffled kindness, and sees the folly of endeavouring to stroke a tyger into a lamb, or to court an Ethiopian out of his colour. South's Sermons.
To FRUSTRATE. v. a. [frustrare, Latin; frustrer, Fr.]
1. To defeat; to disappoint; to balk.
It is an axiom of nature, that natural desire cannot utterly be frustrate. Hosker, b. i.
I survive,
To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out
Rotten opinion, which hath writ me down
After my seeming. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will;
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill. Dryden.
Than wife to frustrate all our plots and wiles. Milt. P. Lost.
2. To make null; to nullify.
The act of parliament which gave all his lands to the queen, did cut off and frustrate all such conveyances. Spenser.
Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam; and by vanquishing
Temptation, hast regain'd lost paradise,
And frustrate the conquest fraudulent. Milton's Par. Reg.
The peculiar strength of the motive may of itself perhaps contribute to frustrate the efficacy of it, rendering it liable to be suspected by him to whom it is addressed. Atterbury's Sermon.
FRUSTRATE. participial adj. [from the verb.]
1. Vain; ineffectual; useless; unprofitable.
He is drown'd
Whom thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search on land. Shakespeare's Tempest.
The ruler of the province of Judea being by Julian buffed in the re-edifying of this temple, flaming balls of fire issuing near the foundation, and oft consuming the workmen, made the enterprise frustrate. Raleigh's History.
All at once employ their thronging darts;
But out of order thrown, in air they join,
And multitude makes frustrate the design. Dryden's Ovid.
2. Null; void.
Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that, the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hosker, b. v. f. 42.
FRUSTRATION. n. f. [frustratio, Latin, from frustrare.] Disappointment; defeat.
In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irrefragable power countermands their deepest projects, splits their counsels, and smites their most refined policies with frustration and a curse. South's Sermons.
FRUSTRATIVE. adj. [from frustrate.] Fallacious; disappointing. Ainsworth.
FRUSTRATORY. adj. [from frustrate.] That which makes any procedure void; that which vacates any former process. Bartolus restrains this to a frustratory appeal. Ayliffe's Par.

FRY. n. f. [from free, foam, Danish. Skinner.]
1. The swarm of little fishes just produced from the spawn.
They come to us, but us love draws;
He swallows us, and never chaws;
By him, as by chain'd shot, whole ranks do die;
He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry. Donne.
Forthwith the founts and seas, each creek and bay,
With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals

FUE

Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave in sculls, that oft Bank the mid-sea. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
The angler had the hap to draw up a very little fish from among the fry. L'Estrange.
So close behind some promontory lie
The huge leviathans, 't attend their prey;
And give no chase, but swallow in the fry,
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way. Dryd.
2. Any swarm of animals; or young people in contempt.
Out of the fry of these rakehell hordeboys, growing up in knavery and villany, are their kern continually supplied and maintained. Spenser on Ireland.
I hem before the fry of children younger
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,
And to the maidens founding timbrels fung. Fairy Queen.
Draw me no confessions there,
Nor dog, nor goat, nor bull, nor bear;
Nor any of that monstrous fry
Of animals that stock the sky. Oldham.
The young fry must be held at a distance, and kept under the discipline of contempt. Calder on Pride.
FRY. n. f. A kind of sieve.

To FRY. v. n.
1. To be roasted in a pan on the fire.
2. To suffer the action of fire.
So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise;
Above the brims they force their fiery way,
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day. Dryd. En.
3. To melt with heat.
Spices and gums about them melting fry,
And, phoenix like, in that rich nest they die. Waller.
4. To be agitated like liquor in the pan on the fire.
Oil of sweet almonds, newly drawn with fugar, and a little spice, spread upon bread toasted, is an excellent nourisher; but then, to keep the oil from frying in the stomach, drink mild beer after it. Bacon's Natural History.
Where no ford he finds, no water fries,
Nor billows with unequal murmurs roar,
But smoothly slide along, and swell the shoar,
That court he steer'd. Dryden's En.
FRYING-PAN. n. f. [from the verb.] A dish of things fried.
FRYING-PAN. n. f. [fry and pan.] The vessel in which meat is roasted on the fire.
If I pass by sea, I may chance to fall from the frying-pan into the fire. L'Estrange.
We understand by out of the frying-pan into the fire, that things go from bad to worse.
A freeman of London has the privilege of disturbing a whole street, for an hour together, with the twanking of a brass kettle or a frying-pan. Addison's Spectator.
To FUS. v. a. To put off; to delay by false pretences; to cheat. It is generally written fsk. See Fon.
A hundred mark is a long lone for a poor lone woman to bear; and I have borne, and borne, and borne, and have been fudd'd off and fudd'd off from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
FUS. n. f. A plump chubby boy.
FUSCATED. adj. [fucatus, Latin.]
1. Painted; disguised with paint.
2. Disguised by false show.
FUSCUS. n. f. [Latin.] Paint for the face.

To FUDGLE. v. a. [Of unknown etymology.] To make drunk.
Earnest brimming bowls
Leave every soul the table floating round,
And pavement faithless to the fuddled feet. Thomson's Autumn.
To FUDGLE. v. n. To drink so excess.
Men, we see, will be whoring and fuddling on still. L'Estr.
FUEL. n. f. [from feu, fire, French.] The matter or aliment of fire.
This shall be with burning and fuel of fire. Jf. ix. 5.
This spark will prove a raging fire,
If wind and fuel be brought to feed it with. Shak. H. VI.
Mov'd by my charms, with them your love may cease;
And as the fuel sinks, the flame decays. Pri.
To FUEL. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To feed fire with combustible matter.
And yet he cannot waste by this,
Nor long endure this torturing wrong;
For more corruption needful is,
To fuel such a fever long. Donne.
Never,

FUG

Never, alas! the dreadful name
That fash the infernal flame
The fud'd chimney blazes wide. Thomson's Autumn.
2. To store with fring.

FUGITIVE. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. One who runs from his station or duty.
Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects; for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. Bacon's Essay 8.
Back to thy punishment,
False fugitive! and to thy speed add wings,
Left with a whip of scorpions I pursue Thy ling'ring. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
We understand by some fugitive that he hath commanded
The generals to return with victory, or expect A shameful death. Denham's Sophy.
2. One who takes shelter under another power from punishment.
There are also in this realm of England too many, which, being men of good inheritance, are fled beyond the seas, where they live under princes which are her majesty's professed enemies; and converse and are confederates with other traitors and fugitives, which are there abiding. Spenser on Ireland.
Your royal highness is too great and too just a monarch either to want or to receive the homage of rebellious fugitives. Dryden.
FUGITIVENESS. n. f. [from fugitive.]
1. Volatility; fugacity.
That divers salts, emerging upon the analysis of many concretes, are very volatile, is plain from the fugitiveness of salt and of hartshorn ascending in distillation. Boyle.
2. Instability; uncertainty.
FUGUE. n. f. [French, from fuga, Latin.] In musick, some point consisting of four, five, six, or any other number of notes begun by some one single part, and then seconded by a third, fourth, fifth and sixth part, if the composition consists of so many; repeating the same, or such like notes, so that the several parts follow, or come in one after another in the same manner, the leading parts still flying before those that follow. Harv.
The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The skillful organist plies his grave and fancied descant in lofty fugues; or through the whole symphony artful and unimagined touches adorn and grace the well-studied chords of some choice composer. Milton on Education.
His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,

FUL

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire. Addison.
FULCIMENT. n. f. [fulcimen, fulcimentum, Latin.] That on which a body rests, which acts or is acted upon at each end, as a balance or a lever.
The power that equiponderates with any weight, must have the same proportion unto it as there is betwixt their several distances from the center or fulciment. Wilkins.
To FULFIL. v. a. [ful and fill.]
1. To fill till there is no room for more. This sense is now not used.
Six gates i' th' city, with massy staples,
And correlative and fulfilling bolts,
Sparre up the sons of Troy. Shak. Troil. and Cressida, Prolog.
2. To answer any prophecy or promise by performance.
They knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him. Acts xiii. 27.
The fury bath'd them in each other's blood;
Then, having fix'd the fight, exulting flies,
And bears fulfill'd her promise to the skies. Dryden's En.
3. To answer any purpose or design.
Here nature seems fulfill'd in all her ends. Milt. P. Lost.
4. To answer any desire by compliance or gratification.
If on my wounded breast thou drop'st a tear,
Think for whose sake my breast that wound did bear;
And faithfully my last desires fulfill,
As I perform my cruel father's will. Dryden's Ovid.
5. To answer any law by obedience.
Love worketh no ill to his neighbour, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law. Ro. xiii. 10.
This I my glory account,
My exaltation, and my whole delight,
That thou in me well-pleas'd, declar'st thy will Fulfill'd, which to fulfill is all my bliss. Milton's Par. Lost.
FULFRAUGHT. adj. [ful and fraught.] Fully stored.
Thy fall hath left a kind of blot
To mark the fulfought man, the best endu'd,
With some suspicion. Shakespeare's Henry V.
FULGENCEY. n. f. [fulgens, Latin.] Splendour; glitter. DiD.
FULGENT. adj. [fulgens, Latin.] Shining; dazzling; exquisitely bright.
As from a cloud, his fulgent head,
And shape star-bright, appear'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Better is an handful with quietness than both the hands full with travel and vexation of spirit. Ecc. iv. 6.
2. Abounding in any quality good or bad.
With pretence from Strephon her to guard,
He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.
You should tread a course
Pretty and full of view. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, are full of inconvenience; for they taint business through want of secrecy, and they export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon's Essay 49.
In that sweet season, as in bed I lay,
9 Y I turn'd

FUL

- I turn'd my weary side, but still in vain,
Though full of youthful health and void of pain. Dryden.
He is full of wants which he cannot supply, and compass'd about with infirmities which he cannot remove. Tillotson, Sermon.
From yon bright heaven our author fetch'd his fire,
And paints the passions that your eyes inspire;
Full of that flame, his tender scenes he warms,
And frames his goddesses by your matchless charms. Granville.
3. Stored with any thing; well supplied with any thing.
Full of days was he;
Two ages past, he liv'd the third to see. Tickell.
4. Plump; faginated; fat.
A gentleman of a full body having broken his skin by a fall, the wound inflamed. Wifeman's Surgery.
5. Saturated; fated.
I am full of the burnt offerings of rams. Isa. i. 11.
The alteration of scenes feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.
6. Crowded in the imagination or memory.
Every one is full of the miracles done by cold baths on de-cayed and weak constitutions. Lacke.
7. That which fills or makes full; large; great in effect.
Water diggeth a full meal sooner than any other liquor.
8. Complete; such as that nothing further is desired or wanted.
That day had seen the full accomplishment
Of all his travels. Daniel's Civil War.
Being tried at that time only with a promise, he gave full credit to that promise, and still gave evidence of his fidelity as fast as occasions were offered. Hammond's Pract. Catechism.
The resurrection of Jesus from the dead hath given the world full assurance of another life. Tillotson, Sermon 5.
9. Complete without abatement; at the utmost degree.
At the end of two full years Pharaoh dreamed. Genesis.
After hard riding plunge the horses into water, and allow them to drink as they please; but gallop them full speed, to warm the water in their bellies. Swift's Direct. to the Groom.
10. Containing the whole matter; expressing much.
Where my expressions are not so full as his, either our language or my art were defective; but where mine are fuller than his, they are but the impressions which the often reading of him hath left upon my thoughts. Denham.
Should a man go about with never so set study to describe such a natural form of the year before the deluge as that which is at present established, he could scarcely do it in so few words, so fit and proper, so full and express. Woodward.
11. Strong; not faint; not attenuated.
I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart;
but the saying is true, the empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Barrels placed under the floor of a chamber, make all noises in the fame more full and resounding. Bacon's Nat. History.
Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line. Pope.
12. Mature; perfect.
In the sultanry of the Mamelukes, slaves reigned over families of free men; and much like were the case, if you suppose a nation, where the custom were that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers and mothers out of their possessions. Bacon's Holy War.
13. [Applied to the moon.] Complete in its orb.
Towards the full moon, as he was coming home one morning, he felt his legs faulter. Wifeman's Surgery.
14. Noting the conclusion of any matter, or a full stop.
Therewith he ended, making a full point of a hearty sigh. Sidney.
15. Spread to view in all dimensions.
Till about the end of the third century, I do not remember to have seen the head of a Roman emperor drawn with a full face; they always appear in profile. Addison on Medals.
FULL. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. Complete measure; freedom from deficiency.
When we return,
We'll see those things effected to the full. Shak. Henry VI.
He liked the pomp and absolute authority of a general well, and preserved the dignity of it to the full. Clarendon, b. viii.
The picture of Ptolemy Philopater is given by the foremen-tioned authors to the full. Dryden's Preface to Cleomenes.
Sicilian tortures and the brazen bull,
Are emblems, rather than express the full
Of what he feels. Dryden's Pers. Sat. iii.
If where the rules not far enough extend,
Some lucky licence answer to the full. Pope's Criticism.
2. The highest state or degree.
The swan's down feather,
That stands upon the swell at full of tide, Neither way inclines. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
3. The whole; the total.
The king hath won, and hath sent out
A speedy pow'r to encounter you, my lord:
This is the news at full. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

FUL

- But what at full I know, thou know'st no part;
I knowing all my peril, thou no art. Shakespeare.
4. The state of being full.
When I had fed them to the full. Jer. v. 7.
5. [Applied to the moon.] The time in which the moon makes a perfect orb.
Brains in rabbits, woodcocks, and calves, are fullest in the full of the moon. Bacon's Natural History.
FULL. adv.
1. Without abatement.
In the unity of place they are full as scrupulous; for many of their crickets limit to that very spot of ground where the play is supposed to begin. Dryden's Dramatick Poessy.
A modest blush he wears, not form'd by art;
Free from deceit his face, and full as free his heart. Dryden.
The most judicious writer is sometimes mistaken after all his care; but the hasty critic, who judges on a view, is full as liable to be deceived. Dryden's Aurengz. Preface.
Since you may
Suspect my courage, if I should not lay,
The pawn I proffer shall be full as good. Dryd. Virg. Poesy.
2. With the whole effect.
'Tis the pencil, thrown luckily full upon the horse's mouth to express the foam, which the painter, with all his skill, could not perform without it. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony,
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.
3. Exactly.
Full in the centre of the sacred wood,
An arm ariseth of the Stygian flood. Addison on Italy.
Full nineteen sailors did the ship convey,
A shoal of nineteen dolphins round her play. Addis. Ovid.
4. Directly.
He met her full, but full of warefulness. Sidney.
He then confronts the bull,
And on his ample forehead aiming full,
The deadly stroke descending pierc'd the skull. Dryden.
At length resolv'd, he throws with all his force
Full at the temples of the warrior horse. Dryden's Tene.
5. It is placed before adverbs and adjectives, to intend or strengthen their signification.
Why on your shield, so goodly scord,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head?
Full lively is the semblant, though the substance dead. F. 2.
I was set at work
Among my maids; full little, God knows, looking Either for such men or such business. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Full well ye reject the commandment. Mar. vi. 9.
Adam was all in tears, and to his guide
Lamenting turn'd full sad. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
You full little think that you must be the beginner of the discourse yourself. Mare's Divine Dialogues.
Full little thought of him the gentle knight. Dryden.
Full well the god his sister's envy knew,
And what her aims and what her arts pursue. Dryden.
There is a perquisite full as honest, by which you have the best part of a bottle of wine for yourself.
FULL is much used in composition to intimate any thing arrived at its highest state, or utmost degree.
FULL-BLOWN. adj. [full and blown.]
1. Spread to the utmost extent, as a perfect blossom.
My glories are past danger; they're full-blown:
Things, that are blasted, are but in the bud. Denb. Sophy.
My full-blown youth already fades apace;
Of our short being 'tis the shortest space! Dryden's Juven.
2. Stretched by the wind to the utmost extent.
He who with bold Cratinus is inspir'd,
With zeal and equal indignation fir'd;
Who at enormous villany turns pale,
And steers against it with a full-blown sail. Dryd. Pers. Sat.
FULL-NOT-TOMED. adj. [full and bottom.] Having a large bottom.
I was obliged to sit at home in my morning-gown, having pawned a new suit of cloaths and a full-bottomed wig for a sum of money. Guarison, No. 166.
FULL-EX'ERD. [full and ear.] Having the heads full of grain.
As flames roll'd by the winds conspiring force,
O'er full-ear'd corn, or torrents raging coule. Denham.
FULL-EY'ED. [full and eye.] Having large prominent eyes.
FULL-FE'D. [full and fed.] Sated; fat; faginated.
All as a partridge plump, full-fed and fair,
She form'd this image of well-bodied air. Pope's Dunciad.
FULL-LADEN. [full and laden.] Laden 'till there can be no more.
It were unfit that so excellent a reward as the Gospel promises should stoop down, like fruit upon a full-laden bough, to be plucked by every idle and wanton hand. Tillotson's Sermon.

FULL-SPR'AD.

FUL

- FULL-SPR'AD. [full and spread.] Spread to the utmost extent.
How easy 'tis, when destiny proves kind,
With full-spread sails to run before the wind;
But those that gainst stiff gales lavecoring go,
Must be at once resolv'd and skilful too. Dryden.
FULL-SU'MMED. [full and summ'd.] Complete in all its parts.
The time was that the cedar stretched forth his imperial branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and that the king of birds nestled within his leaves, thick feathered, and with full-summ'd wings fastening his talons East and West;
but now the eagle is become half naked. Howell's 1st Ec. Forest.
To FULL. v. a. [fulle, Latin.] To cleanse cloth from its oil or grease.
FULLAGE. n. f. [from full.] The money paid for fulling or cleansing cloth.
FULLER. n. f. [fulle, Latin.] One whose trade is to cleanse cloth.
The clothiers have put off
The spinsters, carders, fullers, weavers. Shakespeare's H. VIII.
His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can whiten them. Mar. ix. 3.
FULLERS Earth. n. f.
Fullers earth is a marl of a close texture, extremely soft and unctuous to the touch: when dry it is of a greyish brown colour, in all degrees, from very pale to almost black, and generally has something of a greenish cast in it. The finest fullers earth is dug in our own island. Hill's Mat. Medica.
The fullers' earth of England is very various, and it very much exceeds any yet discovered abroad in goodness; which is one great reason why the English surpass all other nations in the woollen manufacture. Woodward on Fossils.
FULLERY. n. f. [from fuller.] The place where the trade of a fuller is exercised.
FULLINGMILL. n. f. [full and mill.] A mill where the water raises hammers which beat the cloth 'till it be cleansed.
By large hammers, like those used for paper and fulling-mills, they beat their hemp. Morimer.
FULLY. adv. [from full.]
1. Without vacuity.
2. Completely; without lack; without more to be desired.
There are many graces for which we may not cease hourly to sue, graces which are in bestowing always, but never come to be fully had in this present life; and therefore, when all things here have an end, endless thanks must have their beginning in a state which bringeth the full and final fatisfaction of all such perpetual desires. Hooker, b. v. f. 43.
He fully possessed the entire revelation he had received from God, and had thoroughly digested it. Locke.
The goddess cry'd
It's enough, I'm fully satisfy'd. Addison's Ovid's Metam.
FULMINANT. adj. [fulminans, Fr. fulminans, Latin.] Thundering; making a noise like thunder.
To FULMINATE. v. n. [fulmino, Lat. fulminare, French.]
1. To thunder.
2. To make a loud noise or crack.
Whilst it was in fusion we cast into it a live coal, which presently kindled it, and made it boil and flash for a pretty while: after which we cast in another glowing coal, which made it fulminate afresh. Boyle.
In damps one is called the suffocating, and the other the ful-minating damp. Woodward's Natural History.
3. To issue out ecclesiastical censures.
To FULMINATE. v. a. To throw out as an object of terror.
As excommunication is not greatly regarded here in England, as now fulminated; so this constitution is out of use among us in a great measure. Ayliffe's Parergon.
FULMINATION. n. f. [fulminatio, Latin; fulmination, French, from fulminare.]
1. The act of thundering.
2. Denunciations of censure.
The fulminations from the vatican were turned into ridicule. Ayliffe's Parergon.
FULMINATORY. adj. [fulminatus, Latin; from fulminare.]
Thundering; striking horror.
FULNESS. n. f. [from full.]
1. The state of being filled so as to have no part vacant.
Your heave-offering shall be reckoned the fulness of the wine-press. Numb. xviii. 27.
To the houses I wished nothing more than safety, fulness, and freedom. King Charles.
2. The state of abounding in any quality good or bad.
3. Completeness; such as leaves nothing to be desired.
Our enjoyments are so complete, I turn wishes into gratulations, and congratulating their fulness only with their continuance. South.
4. Completeness from the coalition of many parts.
The king set forwards to London, receiving the acclama-tions and applauses of the people as he went; which indeed were true and unfeigned, as might well appear in the very demonstrations and fulness of the cry. Bacon's Henry VII.

FUM

5. Completeness; freedom from deficiency.
He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such as she;
And the fair divided excellence,
Whole fulness of perfection lies in him. Shakespeare's K. John.
6. Repletion; satiety.
I need not instance in the habitual intemperance of rich tables, nor the evil accidents and effects of fulness, pride and lust, wantonness and softness. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
7. Plenty; wealth.
To lapse in fulness
Is forer than to lie for need; and fallhood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
8. Struggling perturbation; swelling in the mind.
A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fulness of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce. Bacon, Essay 28.
9. Largeness; extent.
There wanted the fulness of a plot, and variety of characters to form it as it ought; and perhaps something might have been added to the beauty of the style. Dryden.
10. Force of sound, such as fills the ear; vigour.
This sort of pastoral derives almost its whole beauty from a natural ease of thought and smoothness of verse; whereas that of most other kinds consists in the strength and fulness of both. Pope.
FULSOME. adj. [from fulle, Saxon, foul.]
1. Nauseous; offensive.
The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands;
And in the doing of the deed of kind,
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shakespeare.
He that brings fulsome objects to my view,
With nauseous images my fancy fills,
And all goes down like oxymel of squills. Recommon.
Now half the youth of Europe are in arms,
How fulsome must it be to stay behind,
And die of rank diseases here at home? Ottway's Orphan.
2. Of a rank odious smell.
White fatyrion is of a dainty smell, and bean-flowers:
again, if the plant puts forth white flowers only, and those not thin or dry, they are commonly of rank and fulsome smell.
Bacon's Natural History, No. 507.
3. Tending to obcenicity.
A certain epigram, which is ascribed to the emperor, is more fulsome than any passage I have met with in our poet. Dryden.
FULSOMELY. adv. [from fulsome.] Nauseously; rankly; ob-scenely.
FULSOMENESS. n. f. [from fulsome.]
1. Nauseousness.
2. Rank smell.
3. Obcenicity.
No decency is considered, no fulsome is omitted, no venom is wanting, as far as dulness can supply it. Dryden.
FUMADO. n. f. [fumus, Latin.] A smoked fish.
Fish that serve for the hotter countries, they used at first to fume, by hanging them up on long sticks one by one, drying them with the smoke of a soft and continual fire, from which they purchased the name of fumados. Carcu.
FUMAGE. n. f. [from fumus, Latin.] Hearthmoney. Diſt.
FUMATORY. n. f. [fumaria, Lat. fumetaria, Fr.] See FUMITORY.
It hath divided leaves resembling those of the umbelliferous plants: the flowers, which are collected into a spike, are of an anomalous figure, somewhat resembling a papilionaceous flower, consisting of two petals or leaves, open like two lips, the upper lip ending in a spur: the footstalk is joined to the middle part of the flower: the fruit is either of a long or a round figure, which is like a pod. Miller.
Her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumatory,
Doth root upon. Shakespeare's Henry V.
To FUMBLE. v. n. [femblem, Dutch.]
1. To attempt any thing awkwardly or ungainly.
Our mechanick thefts will have their atoms never once to have fumbled in these their motions, nor to have produced any inept system. Cudworth.
2. To puzzle; to strain in perplexity.
Am not I a friend to help you out? You would have been fumbling half an hour for this excuse. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
3. To play childishly.
I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end. Shakespeare's Henry V.
To FUMBLE. v. a. To manage awkwardly.
As many farewells as be stars in heav'n,
With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,
He fumbles up all in one loose adieu. Shakespeare.
His greasy bald-pate choir
Came fumbling o'er the heads, in such an agony,
They told 'em false for fear. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
FUMBLER. n. f. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.
FUMBLINGLY. adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.
FUME. n. f. [fumus, French; fumus, Latin.]
1. Smoke.
2. Thus

FUM

- Thus fighting fires a while themselves consume;
But freight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fumes,
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly. Dryden.
2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.
Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes. Shakespeare.
It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, of other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.
In Winter, when the heat without is less, it becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or crafter vapour; and may, by proper vessels, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward's Natural History.
3. Exhalation from the stomach.
The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. South's Sermons.
Plung'd in sloth we lie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden's Pers. Sat.
Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain surprize,
And its mad fumes in hot discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove:
Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love. Dryden's Aurea.
4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.
The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. South.
5. Any thing unsubstantial.
When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassil convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.
Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influences upon those things below, than indeed they have, but in grols.
Bacon, Essay 59.
To lay aside all that may seem to have a shew of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work. Bacon's War with Spain.
- TO FUME. v. n. [fumer, French; fumo, Latin.]
1. To smoke.
Their pray'r's pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd,
By their great intercessor, came in fight
Before the Father's throne. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. xi.
From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryd. En.
Strait hover round the fair her airy band;
Some, as the fipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd. Pope.
2. To vapour; to yield exhalations.
Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
Silenus lay,
Whole constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil in each extended vein. Roscommon.
3. To pass away in vapours.
We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning;
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapours,
Before our hands be at work. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
The first fresh dawn then wak'd the gladden'd race
Of uncorrupted man, nor blusht to see
The sluggish sleep beneath its sacred beam;
For their light slumbers gentle fum'd away. Thomson's Spring.
4. To be in a rage.
When he knew his rival free'd and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:
He frets, he fumes, he flares, he stamps the ground,
The hollow tow'r with clamours rings around. Dryden.
- TO FUME. v. a.
1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.
Those that serve for hot countries they used at first to fume, by hanging them upon long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire. Carew.
2. To perfume with odours in the fire.
She fum'd the temples with an od'rous flame,
And oft before the sacred altars came, Dryden.
To pray for him who was an empty name.
The fuming of the holes with brimstones, garlick, or other unfavoury things, will drive moles out of the ground. Martini.
3. To disperse in vapours.
The heat will fume away most of the scent. Martini.
- FUMETTE. n. f. [French] A word introduced by cooks, and the pupils of cooks, for the stink of meat.
A haunch of venison made her sweat,
Unless it had the right fumette. Swift.
- FUMID. adj. [fumidus, Latin.] Smoky; vaporous.

FUN

- A crafts and fumid exhalation is caused from the combat of the sulphur and iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aquafortis. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. ii. c. 5.
- FUMIDITY. n. f. [from fumid] Smokiness; tendency to smoke. Dia.
- TO FUMIGATE. v. n. [from fumus, Latin; fumiger, Fr.]
1. To smoke; to perfume by smoke or vapour.
Wouldst thou preserve thy family's health,
With fragrant thyme the city fumigate,
And break the waxen walls to save the state. Dryden's Virg.
2. To medicate or heal by vapours.
FUMIGATION. n. f. [fumigatio, Latin; fumigation, French;
from fumigare] Scents raised by fire.
Fumigations, often repeated, are very beneficial. Arbuthnot.
My fumigation is to Venus, just
The souls of roses, and red coral's dust:
And, last, to make my fumigation good,
'Tis mixt with sparrows brains and pigeons blood. Dryden.
2. The application of medicines to the body in fumes.
FUMINGLY. adv. [from fumus] Angriily; in a rage.
That which we move for our better learning and instruction fake, turneth unto anger and choler in them: they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fuming's, that they are ashamed to defile their pens with making answer to such idle questions. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.
- FUMITER. n. f. See FUMATORY.
Why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vex'd sea; linging aloud,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds. Shakespeare.
- FUMOUS. adj. [fumeus, French; from fume] Producing fumes.
From dice and wine the youth retir'd to rest,
And puff'd the fumes god from out his breast:
Ev'n then he dreamt of drink and lucky play;
More lucky had it lasted till the day. Dryden's En.
- FUN. n. f. [A low cant word] Sport; high merriment; fulicksome delight.
Don't mind me, though, for all my fun and jokes,
You bards may find us bloods good-natur'd folks. Merc.
- FUNCTION. n. f. [functio, Latin.]
1. Discharge; performance.
There is hardly a greater difference between two things than there is between a representing commoner in the function of his public calling, and the same person in common life. Swift.
2. Employment; office.
The ministry is not now bound to any one tribe: now none is secluded from that function of any degree, state, or calling. Whitgift.
You have paid the heav'n's your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling. Shakef. Measure for Measure.
Nor was it any policy of state, or obliquity of will, or partiality of affection either to the men or of their function, which fixed me. King Charles.
This double function of the goddess gives a considerable light and beauty to the ode which Horace has address'd to her. Addison's Remarks on Italo.
Let not these indignities discourage us from asserting the just privileges and pre-eminence of our holy function and character. Atterbury's Sermons.
3. Single act of any office.
Without difference those functions cannot, in orderly sort,
be executed. Hector.
They have several offices and prayers against fire, tempests, and especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillingfleet's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Cath.
4. Trade; occupation.
Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits. Shakespeare.
5. Office of any particular part of the body.
The bodies of men, and other animals, are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functions. Bentley's Sermons.
6. Power; faculty.
Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function failing
With forms to his conceit. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Nature seems
In all her functions weary of herself:
My race of glory run, and race of shame;
And I shall shortly be wick them that rest.
Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,
As the mind opens, and its functions spread,
Imagination all her dang'rous art,
And pours it all upon the peccant part. Pope.
Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are their diseases consistent with the common functions of life. Arbuthnot.
- FUND. n. f. [fund, French; funda, a bag, Latin.]
1. Stock; capital; that by which any expense is supported.
He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.

FUN

- Part must be left, a fund when foes invade,
And part employ'd to roll the watry tide. Dryden.
In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust entirely to the stock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.
2. Stock or bank of money.
As my estate has been hitherto either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres. Add.
- FUNDAMENT. n. f. [fundamentum, Latin.] The back part of the body.
FUNDAMENTAL. adj. [fundamentalis, Lat. from fundament.]
Serving for the foundation; that upon which the rest is built;
essential; important; not merely accidental.
Until this can be agreed upon, one main and fundamental cause of the most grievous war is not like to be taken from the earth. Raleigh's Essays.
You that will be less fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the charge of it. Shakef. Coriolanus.
Others, when they were brought to allow the throne vacant, thought the succession should go to the next heir, according to the fundamental laws of the kingdom, as if the last king were actually dead. Swift's Examiner.
Gain some general and fundamental truths, both in philosophy, in religion, and in human life. Watts.
Such we find they are, as can controul
The servile actions of our wav'ring soul,
Can fright, can alter, or can chain the will;
Their ill all built on life, that fundamental ill. Prior.
Yet some there were among the founder few,
Of those who less presum'd, and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws. Pope on Criticism.
- FUNDAMENTAL. n. f. Leading proposition; important and essential part which is the groundwork of the rest.
We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those superstructures and consequences that arise from them. South's Sermons.
It is a very just reproach, that there should be so much violence and hatred in religious matters among men who agree in all fundamentals, and only differ in some ceremonies, or mere speculative points. Swift.
- FUNDAMENTALLY. adv. [from fundamental] Essentially;
originally.
As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perspectively in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason, in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end. Grav.
Religion is not only useful to civil society, but fundamentally necessary to its very birth and constitution. Bentley.
The unlimited power placed fundamentally in the body of a people, the legislators endeavour to deposit in such hands as would preserve the people. Swift on the Diff. in Ath. and Rome.
- FUNERAL. n. f. [funus, Latin; funerailles, French.]
1. The solemnization of a burial; the payment of the last honours to the dead; obsequies.
Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,
Come I to speak in Caesar's funeral. Shak. Julius Caesar.
All things that we ordain'd festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral. Shakespeare.
He that had cast out many unburied, had none to mourn for him, nor any solemn funerals, nor sepulchre with his fathers. 2 Mac. v. 10.
No widow at his funeral shall weep.
The pomp or procession with which the dead are carried. Sandy.
The long funerals blacken all the way. Pope.
You are sometimes desirous to see a funeral pass by in the street. Swift's Directions to the Chambermaid.
3. Burial; interment.
May he find his funeral
F' th' sands, when he before his day shall fall. Denham.
- FUNERAL. adj. Used at the ceremony of interring the dead.
Our infruments to melancholy bells,
Our wedding cheer to a sad funeral feast. Shak. R. and Jul.
Let such honours
And funeral rites, as to his birth and virtues
Are due, be first perform'd. Denham's Sophy.
Thy hand o'er towns the funeral torch displays,
And forms a thousand ill ten thousand ways. Dryden.
- FUNERAL. adj. [funeraria, Latin.] Suiing a funeral; dark; dismal.
But if his soul hath wing'd the destin'd flight,
Inhabitant of deep disastrous night,
Homeward with pious speed repairs the main,
To the pale shade funeral rites ordain. Pope's Odyssey, b. i.
- FUNGUS. n. f. [from fungus.] Unfold excrescence. Dia.
- FUNGUS. adj. [from fungus.] Excrescent; spongy; wanting firmness.
It is often employed to keep down the fungous lips that spread upon the bone; but it is much more painful than the escharotick medicines. Sharp's Surgery.

FUR

- FUNGUS. n. f. [Latin.] Strictly a mushroom: a word used to express such excrescences of flesh as grow out upon the lips of wounds, or any other excrescence from trees or plants not naturally belonging to them; as the agarick from the larchtree, and auricula judæ from elder. Quincy.
The surgeon ought to vary the diet as the fibres lengthen too much, are too fluid, and produce fungus, or as they harden and produce callousities. Arbuthnot on Diet.
- FUNICLE. n. f. [funiculus, Latin.] A small cord; a small ligature; a fibre.
FUNGULAR. adj. [funiculaire, Fr. from funicle.] Consisting of a small cord or fibre.
FUNK. n. f. A stink. A low word.
FURNEL. n. f. [infundibulum, Latin; whence fundible, fundle, funnel.]
1. An inverted hollow cone with a pipe descending from it, through which liquors are poured into vessels with narrow mouths; a tundish.
If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it; but with a funnel, and by degrees, you shall fill many of them. Ben. Johnson's Discoveries.
Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,
Through which ingested meats with ease descend. Blackm.
The outward ear or auricula is made hollow, and contracted by degrees, to draw the sound inward, to take in as much as may be of it, as we use a funnel to pour liquor into any vessel. Ray on the Creation.
2. A pipe or passage of communication.
Towards the middle are two large funnels, bored through the roof of the grotto, to let in light or fresh air. Addison.
- FUR. n. f. [fourrure, French.]
1. Skin with soft hair with which garments are lined for warmth; or covered for ornament.
December must be expressed with a horrid and fearful countenance; as also at his back a bundle of holly, holding in fur mittens the sign of Capricorn. Peachment on Drawing.
'Tis but dressing up a bird of prey in his cap and furs to make a judge of him. L'Estrange.
And lordly gout wrapt up in fur,
And wheezing asthma, loth to stir. Swift.
2. Soft hair of beasts found in cold countries, where nature provides coats suitable to the weather; hair in general.
This night, wherein the cubdrawn bear would couch,
The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry, unbonneted he runs,
And bids what will take all. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Such animals as feed upon flesh qualify it, the one by swallowing the hair or fur of the beasts they prey upon, the other by devouring some part of the feathers of the birds they gorge themselves with. Ray on the Creation.
3. Any moisture exhaled to such a degree as that the remainder sticks on the part.
Methinks I am not right in ev'ry part;
I feel a kind of trembling at my heart:
My pulse unequal, and my breath is strong;
Besides a filthy fur upon my tongue. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 3.
- TO FUR. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To line or cover with skins that have soft hair.
How mad a fight it was to see Dametas, like rich tissue fur'd with lambskins? Sidney's b. ii.
Through tatter'd cloaths small vices do appear;
Robes and fur'd gowns hide all. Shakespeare's King Lear.
You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest;
You fur your gloves with reason's. Shakespeare's Troil. and Cress.
2. To cover with soft matter.
To make lamplblack, take a torch and hold it under the bottom of a latten basin; and, as it groweth to be fur'd and black within, strike it with a feather into some shell. Peachment.
The filters, mourning for their brother's loss,
Their bodies hid in bark, and fur'd with moss. Dryden.
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry fur'd tongues. Phillips.
A dungeon wide and horrible; the walls
On all sides fur'd with mouldy damp, and hung
With clots of rosy gore. Addison.
- FUR. adv. [It is now commonly written far.] At a distance.
The white lovely dove
Doth on her wings her utmost swiftness prove,
Finding the gripe of falcon fierce not fur. Sidney.
- FUR-WROUGHT. adj. [fur and wrought.] Made of fur.
Silent along the mazy margin stray,
And with the fur-wrought fly delude the prey. Gay's Poet.
- FURACIOUS. adj. [furax, Latin.] Thievish; inclined to steal. Dia.
- FURACITY. n. f. [from furax, Latin.] Disposition to theft;
thievishness. Dia.
- FURBELOW. n. f. [fur and below.] Fur sewed on the lower part of the garment; an ornament of dress.
Nays, oft in dreams invention we bestow
To change a founce, or add a furbelow. Pope.

FUR

To FURBLOW. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with ornamental appendages of dress.

When arguments too fiercely glare,
You calm them with a milder air;
To break their points, you turn their force,
And furbelow the plain discourse. Prior.
She was furbowed from head to foot; every ribbon was crinkled, and every part of her garments in curl.
Addison's Spectator, N^o. 129.

To FURNISH. v. a. [from fourbir, French.] To furnish; to polish; to rub to brightness.

It may enter Mowbray's waxen coat,
And furbish new the name of John o' Gaunt. Shak. R. II.
Furbish the spears, and put on the brigandines. Jer. xvi. 4.
Some others who furbish up and reprint his old errors, hold that the sufferings of the damned are not to be, in a strict sense, eternal; but that, after a certain period of time, there shall be a general gaol-delivery of the souls in prison, and that not for a farther execution, but a final release. South's Sermon.

As after Numa's peaceful reign,
The martial Ancus did the sceptre wield;
Furbish'd the rusty sword again,
Refum'd the long-forgotten shield,
And led the Latins to the dusty field. Dryden.

Inferior ministers, for Mars repair
His broken axle-tree, and blunted war;
And send him forth again, with furbish'd arms. Dryden.
FURNISHER. n. f. [from furnisseur, French, from furbish.] One who polishes any thing.

FURCA'TION. n. f. [from furca, Latin.] Forkiness; the state of shooting two ways like the blades of a fork.

When they grow old they grow less branched, and first do lose their brow-antlers, or lowest furcations next the head.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 9.
FURFUR. n. f. [Latin.] Husk or chaff, scurf or dandriff, that grows upon the skin, with some likeness to bran. Quincy.
FURFURACEOUS. adj. [from furfuraceus, Latin.] Husky; branny;
scaly.

FURIOUS. adj. [from furiosus, French; furiosus, Latin.]
1. Mad; phrenetic.

No man did ever think the hurtful actions of furious men and innocents to be punishable. Hooker, b. i. f. 9.

2. Raging; violent; transported by passion beyond reason.
Who can be wife, amaze'd, temperate and furious,
Loyal and neutral in a moment? No man. Shaksp. Macb.

To be furious,
Is to be frighten'd out of fear; and, in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopat.
FURIOUSLY. adv. [from furiosus.] Madly; violently; vehemently.

Which when his brother saw, fraught with great grief
And wrath, he to him leapt furiously. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
They observe countenance to attend the practice; and this carries them on furiously to that which of themselves they are inclined. South's Sermons.

She heard not half, so furiously she flies;
Fear gave her wings. Dryden.

FURIOUSNESS. n. f. [from furiosus.] Frenzy; madness; transport of passion.

To FURL. v. a. [from friser, French.] To draw up; to contract.

When fortune fends a stormy wind,
Then shew a brave and present mind;
And when with too indulgent gales
She swells too much, then furl thy sails. Creech.

FURLONG. n. f. [from furlang, Saxon.] A measure of length; the eighth part of a mile.

If a man stand in the middle of a field and speak aloud, he shall be heard a furlong in round, and that in articulate sounds.
Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 289.

Coming within a few furlongs of the temple, they passed through a very thick grove. Addison's Freeholder.

FURLOUGH. n. f. [from verloof, Dutch.] A temporary dismissal from military service; a licence given to a soldier to be absent.

Brutus and Cato might discharge their souls,
And give them furloughs for another world;
But we, like sentries, are oblig'd to stand
In starless nights, and wait th' appointed hour. Dryden.

FURMENTY. n. f. [More properly frumenty, or frumety, of frumentum, Latin.] Food made by boiling wheat in milk.

Remember, wife, therefore, though I do it not,
The feed-cakes, the pasties, and frumenty pot. Tuff. Husb.

FURNACE. n. f. [from furnus, Latin.] An inclosed fireplace.
Heat not a furnace for your foe so hot
That it not singe yourself. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

The firing pot is for silver and the furnace for gold. Prior.
We have also furnaces of great diversities, that keep great diversity of heats. Bacon's New Atlantis.

The kings of Spain have erected divers furnaces and forges, for the trying and firing of their gold. Abbe.

Whoso saileth not down and worshippeth, shall the same hour be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace. Dan.

FUR

A dungeon horrible, on all sides around,
As one great furnace, flam'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. i.

To FURNACE. v. a. [from the noun.] To throw out as sparks from a furnace. A bad word.

The thick fighs from him. Shakspere's Cymbeline.
To FURNISH. v. a. [from furnir, French.]

1. To supply with what is necessary. She hath directed
How I shall take her from her father's house;
What gold and jewels she is furnish'd with. Shakspere.

His training fuch,
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers,
And never seek for aid out of himself. Shak. Henry VIII.

Thou shalt furnish him liberally out of thy flock. Dent. xv.
Austria, having driven the Turks from Corone, both by sea and land, furnished the city with corn, wine, victual, and powder. Kneller's History of the Turks.

Come, thou stranger, and furnish a table, and feed me of that thou hast ready. Ecclus. xxix. 26.

I shall not need to heap up instances; every one's reading and conversation will sufficiently furnish him, if he wants to be better stored. Locke.

2. To give things for use.
These simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested and furnished to the mind only by these two ways, sensation and reflection. Locke.

It is not any action of the state, but a compact among private persons that hath furnish'd out these several remittances. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

3. To fit up; to fit with appendages.
Something deeper,
Whereof perchance these are but furnishings. Shaksp. care.

Plato entertained some of his friends at dinner, and had in the chamber a bed or couch, neatly and costly furnished. Diogenes came in, and got up upon the bed, and trampled it, saying, I trample upon the pride of Plato. Plato mildly answered, But with greater pride, Diogenes. Bacon's Apoph.

We were led into another great room, furnish'd with old inscriptions. Addison on Italy.

4. To equip; to fit out for any undertaking.
Will your lordship lend me a thousand pounds to furnish me? Shakspere's Henry IV. p. i.

Ideas, forms, and intellects,
Have furnish'd out three different sects. Prior.

Doubtless the man Jesus Christ is furnish'd with superior powers to all the angels in heaven, because he is employed in superior work. Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

5. To decorate; to adorn.
The wounded arm would furnish all their rooms,
And bleed for ever scarlet in the looms. Halfon.

FURNISHER. n. f. [from furnisseur, French, from furnish.] One who supplies of his out.

FURNITURE. n. f. [from furniture, Fr. from furnish.]
1. Moveables; goods put in a house for use or ornament.

No man can transport his large retinue, his sumptuous fare, and his rich furniture into another world. South's Sermons.

There are many noble palaces in Venice: their furniture is not commonly very rich, if we except the pictures from the hands of the best masters. Addison.

2. Appendages.
By a general conflagration mankind shall be destroyed, with the form and all the furniture of the earth. Tillotson.

3. Equipage; embellishments; decorations.
Young Clarion, with vauntful lufftyhed,
After his guise did cast abroad to fare,
And thereto 'gan his furnitures prepare. Spenser.

The duke is coming: see, the barge be ready,
And fit it with such furniture as suits
The greatness of his person. Shakspere's Henry VIII.

The ground must be of a mixt brown, and large enough, or the horse's furniture must be of very sensible colours. Lyd.

FURNIER. n. f. [from for.] A dealer in furs.

FURROW. n. f. [from fur, Saxon.]

1. A small trench made by the plow for the reception of seed.
Wheat must be sowed above furrows before Michaelmas. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Then ploughs for feed the fruitful furrows broke,
And oxen labour'd first beneath the yoke. Dryden's Ovid.

2. Any long trench or hollow: as a wrinkle.
My lord it is, though time has plow'd that face
With many furrows since I saw it first;
Yet I'm too well acquainted with the ground quite to forget it. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.

FURROW-WEED. n. f. [from furrow and weed.] A weed that grows in furrowed land.

Crown'd with rank fumiter, and furrow-weeds. Shaksp.

To FURROW. v. a. [from the noun; furrow, Saxon.]

1. To cut in furrows.
While the plowman near at hand,
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land. Milton.

2. To divide in long hollows. No

FUR

No briny tear has furrow'd her smooth cheek. Suckling.
The billows fall, while Neptune lays his mace
On the rough sea, and smooths its furrow'd face. Dryden.

3. To make by cutting.
There go the ships that furrow out their way;
Yea, there of whales enormous fights we see. Watson.

FURRY. adj. [from fur.]
1. Covered with fur; dressed in fur.
From Volga's banks th' imperious Czar Leads forth his furry troops to war. Felton to Lord Gower.

2. Confisting of fur.
Not arm'd with horns of arbitrary might,
Or claws to seize their furry spoils in fight. Dryden.

FURTHUR. adj. [from forth, not from far, as is commonly imagined; farth, farth, farth, corrupted from farth, farth, farth, Saxon. Farther is used by Sir Thomas More.
See FORTH and FARTHER, of which the examples are to be referred to this word.]

1. At a greater distance.
2. Beyond this.
What further need have we of witnesses. Mat. xxvi. 65.

FURTHUR. adv. [from forth.] To a greater distance.
And the angel of the Lord went further, and stood in a narrow place. Numb. xxii. 2.

To FURTHUR. v. a. [from the adverb; farth, Saxon.]
To put onward; to forward; to promote; to countenance;
to assist; to help.

Things thus set in order, in quiet and rest,
Shall further thy harvest, and pleasure thee best. Tuff. Husb.

Could their fond superstition have further'd so great attempts, without the mixture of a true persuasion concerning the irrefragible force of divine power. Hooker, b. v. f. 1.

Grant not, O Lord, the desires of the wicked; further not his wicked device. Pf. cxi. 8.

This binds thee then to further my design,
As I am bound by vow to further thine. Dryden.

FURTHURANCE. n. f. [from farther.] Promotion; advancement;
help.

The Gauls learned them first, and used them only for the furtherance of their trade and private business. Spenser.

Our diligence must search out all helps and furtherances of direction, which scriptures, councils, fathers, histories, the laws and practices of all churches afford. Hooker.

For gain and work, and success in his affairs, he seeketh furtherance of him that hath no manner of power. Hooker.

Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice,
Intreat you to your wonted furtherance? Shak. Henry VI.

If men were minded to live righteously, to believe a God would be no hindrance or prejudice to any such design, but very much for the advancement and furtherance of it. Till.

FURTHURER. n. f. [from farther.] Promoter; advancer.
That earnest favourer and furtherer of God's true religion, that faithful servant to his prince and country. Alcham.

FURTHURMORE. [from farther and more.] Moreover; besides.
This ring I do accept most thankfully,
And so, I pray you, tell him: farthermore,
I pray you, shew my youth old Shylock's house. Shaksp.

FURTHUR. adj. [from farther, Fr. furtius, Latin.] Stolen; gotten by theft.

Or do they, as your schemes, I think, have shown,
Dart furtive beams and glory not their own,
All servants to that source of light, the sun? Prior.

FURUNCLE. n. f. [from furunculus, Fr. furunculus, Latin.] A bile;
an angry pustule.

A furuncle is in its beginning round, hard, and inflamed; and as it increaseth, it riseth up with an acute head, and sometimes a pustule; and then it is more inflamed and painful, when it arrives at its state, which is about the eighth or ninth day. Wise's Surgery.

FURY. n. f. [from furor, Latin; furor, French.]

1. Madness.
2. Rage; passion of anger; tumult of mind approaching to madness.

I do oppose my patience to his fury; and am arm'd
To suffer with a quietness of spirit
The very tyranny and rage of his. Shaksp. Mer. of Venice.

He hath given me to know the nature of living creatures, and the furies of wild beasts. Wisd. vii. 20.

3. Enthusiasm; exaltation of fancy.
Taking up the lute, her wit began to be with a divine fury inspired; and her voice would, in so beloved an occasion, second her wit. Sidney, b. ii.

A fribl, that had number'd in the world
The sun to course two hundred compasses,
In her prophetic fury few'd the work. Shaksp. Othello.

Greater than human kind she seem'd to look,
And with an accent more than mortal spoke;
Her staring eyes with sparkling fury roll,
When all the god came rushing on her soul. Dryden's Æn.

4. [From furia, Latin.] One of the deities of vengeance, and thence a storm, turbulent, violent, raging woman.

The fight of any of the house of York,
Is as a fury to torment my soul. Shaksp. Henry VI. p. iii.

FUS

It was the most proper place for a fury to make her exit; and I believe every reader's imagination is pleas'd, when he sees the angry goddess thus sinking in a tempest, and plunging herself into hell, amidst such a scene of horror and confusion.

Addison's Remarks on Italy.
FURZE. n. f. [from fur, Saxon.] Gorse; goss.

The whole plant is very thorny: the flowers, which are of the pea-bloom kind, are disposed in short thick spikes, which are succeeded by short compressed pods, in each of which are contained three or four kidney-shaped seeds. The species are three, each of which grow wild on the heath and upland-commons in England: the first is sometimes used to make hedges, for which purpose it will do very well for a few years. Milner.

Carry out gravel to fill up a hole,
Both timber and furzin, the turf and the cole. Tuff. Husb.

For fewel, there groweth generally in all parts great store of furze, of which the shrubby sort is called tame, and the better grown French. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

From hence uncertain seasons we may know,
And when to reap the grain, and when to sow,
Or when to fell the furzes. Dryden's Virg. Georg.

FURZY. adj. [from furze.] Overgrown with furze; full of gorse.

Wide through the furzy field their route they take,
Their bleeding bosoms force the thorny brake. Goy.

FUSCA'TION. n. f. [from fuscus, Latin.] The act of darkening or obscuring. Diect.

To FUSE. v. a. [from fundo, fusum, Latin.] To melt; to put into fusion; to liquify by heat.

To FUSE. v. n. To be melted; to be capable of being liqui-fied by heat.

FUSÉE. n. f. [from fusée, French.]
1. The cone round which is wound the cord or chain of a clock or watch.

The reason of the motion of the balance is by the motion of the next wheel, and that by the motion of the next, and that by the motion of the fusée, and that by the motion of the spring: the whole frame of the watch carries a reasonableness in its the passive impression of the intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. A firelock [from fusil, Fr.]; a small neat musquet. This is more properly written fusil.

FUSEE of a bomb or granado shell, is that which makes the whole powder or composition in the shell take fire, to do the designed execution. 'Tis usually a wooden pipe or tap filled with wildfire, or some such matter; and is intended to burn no longer than is the time of the motion of the bomb from the mouth of the mortar to the place where it is to fall, which time Anderson makes twenty-seven seconds. Harris.

FUSÉE. Track of a buck. Ainsworth.

FUSIBLE. adj. [from fusile.] Capable of being melted; capable of being made liquid by heat.

Colours afforded by metalline bodies, either colliquate with or otherwise penetrate into other bodies, especially fusible ones. Boyle.

FUSIBILITY. n. f. [from fusibile.] Capacity of being melted;
quality of growing liquid by heat.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolved it into a nobler use. Watson's Architecture.

The bodies of most use, that are sought for out of the depths of the earth, are the metals, which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleableness. Locke.

FUSILE. adj. [from fusile, French; fusile, Latin.]
1. Capable of being melted; liquifiable by heat.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought Fusile, or grav'd in metal. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Some, less skillful, fancy these scapt that occur in most of the larger Gothick buildings of England are artificial; and will have it, that they are a kind of fusil marble. Woodward.

2. Running by the force of heat
Perpetual flames,
O'er sand and ashes, and the stubborn flint,
Prevailing, turn into a fusil sea. Phillips.

FUSIL. n. f. [from fusil, French.]

1. A firelock; a small neat musquet.

2. [In heraldry, from fusus, Latin.] Something like a spindle.
Fusils must be made long, and small in the middle, in the ancient coat of Mountague, argent three fusils in fesse gules.

FUSILIER. n. f. [from fusil.] A soldier armed with a fusil.

FUSION. n. f. [from fusio, Latin; fusio, French.]
1. The act of melting.

2. The state of being melted, or of running with heat.
Metals in fusion do not flame for want of a copious fume, except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames.

FUSS. n. f. [A low cant word.] A tumult; 'a bustle.

Eni

FUT

- End as it befits your station;
Come to use and application;
Nor with senators keep a futz:
I submit, and answer thus. Swift.
- FUST, n. f. [fuste, French.]
1. The trunk or body of a column.
2. [From fuste, French.] A strong smell, as that of a mouldy barrel.
- To FUST, v. n. [from the noun.] To grow mouldy; to smell ill.
- FUSTIAN, n. f. [fustaine, French, from fuste, a tree, because cotton grows on trees.]
1. A kind of cloth made of linen and cotton, and perhaps now of cotton only.
Is supper ready, the house trimm'd, the serving-men in their new fustian and their white stockings? Shakesp. Lear.
2. A high swelling kind of writing made up of heterogeneous parts, or of words and ideas ill associated; bombast.
Nor will you raise in me combustion,
By dint of high heroic fustian. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 1.
What fustian have I heard these gentlemen find out in Mr. Cowley's odes! In general, I will say, that nothing can appear more beautiful to me than the strength of those images which they condemn. Dryden.
I am much deceived if this be not abominable fustian; that is, thoughts and words ill sorted, and without the least relation to each other. Dryden's Spanish Fryar, Dedication.
Chance thoughts, when govern'd by the close, Smith.
Of rise to fustian, or defend to prove.
- FUSTIAN, adj. [from the noun.]
1. Made of fustian.
2. Swelling; unnaturally pompous; ridiculously tumid. Used of style.
When men argue, th' greatest part
O' th' contest falls on terms of art,
Until the fustian stuff be spent,
And then they fall to th' argument. Hudibras, p. i. can. 3.
Virgil, if he could have seen the first verses of the Sylva, would have thought Statius mad in his fustian description of the statue on the brazen horse. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
FUSTIC, n. f. A sort of wood brought from the West-Indies, used in dying of cloath. Diet.
To FUSTIGATE, v. a. [fustigo, Latin.] To beat with a stick; to cane. Diet.
FUSTILARIAN, n. f. [from fustis.] A low fellow; a flunkard; a scoundrel. A word used by Shakespeare only.
Away, you scullion, you rampallian, you fustilarian: I'll tickle your catastrophe. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
FUSTINESS, n. f. [from fustis.] Mouldiness; stink.
FUSTY, adj. [from fustis.] Ill smelling; mouldy.
Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: he were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel. Shakespeare's Troilus and Crissida.
The fusty plebeians hate thine honours. Shak. Coriolan.
The large Achilles, at this fusty stuff,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause. Shakesp.
FUTILE, adj. [utile, French; utilis, Latin.]
1. Talkative; loquacious.
One utile person, that maketh it his glory to tell, will do more hurt than many that know it their duty to conceal. Bacon.
2. Trifling; worthless; of no weight.
FUTILITY, n. f. [utilité, French, from utile.]
1. Talkativeness; loquacity.
This fable does not strike so much at the utility of women, as at the incontinent levity of a prying humour. L'Estrange.
2. Triflingness; want of weight; want of solidity.

FY

- Trifling futility appears in their signs of the zodiac, and their mutual relations and aspects. Bentley.
- FUTROCKS, n. f. [corrupted from foot books. Skinner.] The lower timbers that hold the ship together.
- FUTURE, adj. [futurus, Latin; futur, French.] That which will be hereafter; to come: as, the future state.
Glory they sung to the most High! good will
To future men, and in their dwellings peace. Milt. P. L.
He sows the teeth at Pallas's command,
And flings the future people from his hand. Addison's Ovid.
FUTURE, n. f. [from the adjective.] Time to come; something to happen hereafter.
Thy letters have transported me beyond
Th' ignorant present time; and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the futu e, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after. Locke.
FUTURELY, adv. [from future.] In time to come.
This prescience of God, as it is prescience, is not the cause of any thing *futur*ly succeeding; neither doth God's foreknowledge impose any necessity, or bind. Raleigh.
FUTURITION, n. f. [from future.] The state of being to be; of being to come to pass hereafter.
Is it imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang so loose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no? South's Sermons.
- FUTURITY, n. f. [from future.]
1. Time to come; events to come.
Not my service pass, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransom me. Shakespeare's Othello.
All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hinder'd by distance of time than the sight of an angel can be determined by distance of place. South.
I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron. Swift.
This, great Amphiarus, lay hid from thee,
Though skill'd in fate and dark futurity. Pope's Statius.
2. The state of being to be; futurity.
It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence into a futurity; it requiring such a free, sedate and intent mind, as, it may be, is no where found but among the platonical ideas. Glavin. Serp. c. 10.
To FUZZ, v. n. [without etymology.] To fly out in small particles.
- FUZZBALL, n. f. [fuzz and ball.] A kind of fungus, which, when pressed, bursts and scatters dust in the eyes.
- FY, interj. [fy, French and Flemish; Öv, Greek; vab, Lat.] A word of blame and disapprobation.
And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathful wreaks themselves do now allay. Fa. Quen.
Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?
A bawd, sir, fy upon him! Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stray!
Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.
Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?
Unhand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:
Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite:
My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite. Dryden.
Fy, madam, he cried, we must be past all these gaities. Tatler, N°. 54.

G.

- Has two sounds, one from the Greek Γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard G, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound G retains before a, o, u, l, r; as, gate, go, gull. The other sound, called that of the soft G, resembles that of J, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived: thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of words before b; as, might. The Saxon g, seems to have had generally the sound of y consonant; whence gate is by rusticks still pronounced yate.
- GA'BARDINE, n. f. [gavardina, Italian.] A coarse frock; any mean dress.
My best way is to creep under his gabardine; there is no other shelter hereabout. Shakespeare's Tempest.
You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my Jewish gabardine. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
The knight did straight submit,
And laid his weapons at her feet:
Next he disrobd his gabardine,
And with it did himself resign. Hudibras, b. i.
- To GA'BLE, v. n. [gabare, Italian; gabbern, Dutch.]
1. To make an inarticulate noise.
When thou could'st not, savage,
Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Flocks of fowl, that when the tempests roar,
With their hoarse gabbles seek the silent shoar. Dryd. Æn.
2. To prate loudly without meaning.
Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house?
Which made some think, when he did gabble,
Th' had heard three labours of Babel. Hudibras, p. i.
Such a rout, and such a rattle,
Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble. Swift.
- GA'BBLE, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.
Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: chough's language, gabble enough, and good enough. Shak. All's well that ends well.
2. Loud talk without meaning.
Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud
Among the builders; each to other calls,
Not understood. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
GA'BLER, n. f. [from gabble.] A prater; a chattering fellow.
GA'BLE, n. f. [gabelle, French; gabello, Italian; gabel, Saxon, a tribute.] An excise; a tax.
The gabels of Naples are very high on oil, wine, and tobacco. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
GABION, n. f. [French.] A wicker basket which is filled with earth to make a fortification or intrenchment.
His battery was defended all along with gabions, and caiks filled with sand. Kneller's History of the Turks.
GA'BLE, n. f. [gaval, Welsh; gabl, French.] The sloping roof of a building.
Take care that all your brick-work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gabl ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work. Mortimer's Husbandry.
GAD, n. f. [gab, Saxon; gaddur, Icelandic, a club.]
1. A wedge or ingot of steel.
Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts of Holland and Flanders, some in bars, and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
2. It seems to be used by Shakespeare for a stile or graver, [from gab, Saxon, a goad.]

GAD

GAG

- I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad of steel will write these words. Shakespeare.
To GAD, v. n. [Derived by Skinner from gadfy; by Junius from gadow, Welsh, to forsake.] To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.
How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding?
—Where I have learnt me to repent. Shakespeare's Rom. and Jul.
Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad. Ecclus. xxv. 25.
The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore,
And thronged forth about the world to gad;
Each land they fill'd, river, stream and shore. Fairfax, b. iv.
Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home. Bacon, Essay 9.
Gad not abroad at ev'ry queft and call
Of an untrained hope or passion;
To court each place or fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation.
Thee, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown, Milton.
And all their echo's moan.
A fierce loud buzzing breeze; their flings draw blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood. Dryd. Virg.
She wreaks her anger on her rival's head;
With furies frights her from her native home,
And drives her gadding, round the world to roam. Dryden.
Gull 'em with freedom,
And you shall see 'em tofs their tails, and gad
As if the breeze had stung them. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.
There's an ox lost, and this comcomb runs a gadding after wild fowl. L'Estrange.
No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually shifting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding. Locke.
GA'DDER, n. f. [from gad.] A rambler; one that runs much abroad without business.
A drunken woman, and a gadder abroad, causeth great anger, and the will not cover her own shame. Ecclus. xxvi. 8.
GADDINGLY, adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.
- GA'DELY, n. f. [gad and fly; but by Skinner, who makes it the original of gad, gadfly.] Supposed to be originally from goad, in Saxon gab, and fly.] A fly that when it stings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about; the breed.
- The fly called the gadfly breedeth of somewhat that swimeth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds. Bac.
Light fly his slumbers, if perchance a fight
Of angry gadflies fasten on the herd. Thomson's Summer.
GAFF, n. f. A harpoon or large hook. Answorth.
GA'FFER, n. f. [gefepe, companion, Saxon.] A word of respect now obsolete, or applied only in contempt to a mean person.
For gaffer Treadwell told us by the bye,
Excellive sorrow is exceeding dry. Gay's Pastoral.
GA'FFLES, n. f. [gapelucay, spears, Saxon.]
1. Artificial spurs put upon cocks when they are set to fight.
2. A steel contrivance to bend cross-bows. Answorth.
- To GAG, v. n. [from gabbel, Dutch, the palate, Minshew.] To stop the mouth with something that may allow to breathe, but hinder to speak.
He's out of his guard already: unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagg'd. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
There foam'd rebellious logic, gagg'd and bound. Pope.
GAG, n. f. [from the verb.] Something put into the mouth to hinder speech or eating.
Some, when the kids their dams too deeply drain,
With gags and muzzles their soft mouths restrain. Dryden.
Your woman would have run up stairs before me; but I have secured her below with a gag in her chaps. Dryden.
GAGE, n. f. [gage, French.] A pledge; a pawn; a caution; any thing given in security.

GAI

Who, when the shamed shield of slain Sansfoy
He spy'd, with that same fairy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same envious gage,
Of victor's glory, from him snatcht away. Fairy Queen.

There I throw my gage
Disclaiming here the kindred of a king,
And lay aside my high blood's royalty. Shaksp. Richard II.
There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell. Shaksp. Richard II.
They from their mothers breasts poor orphans rend,
Nor without gages to the needy lend. Sandy's Paraphrase.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southern's Orosok.
But since it was decreed, auspicious king,
In Britain's right that thou should'st wed the main,
Heav'n, as a gage, would call some previous thing,
And therefore doom'd that Lawson should be slain. Dryden.
In any truth, that gets not possession of our minds by self-evidence or demonstration, the arguments, that gain it assent, are the vouchers and gage of its probability. Locke.

To GAGE, v. a. [gager, French.]
1. To wager; to depose as a wager; to impawn; to give as a caution, pledge, or security.

Against the which, a moiety competent
Was gaged by our king. Shaksp. Hamlet.
Drawing near the shore, he found the Turkish merchants making merry upon the main: unto these merchants he gave due salutations, gaging his faith for their safety, and they likewise to him. Kneller's History of the Turks.
2. To measure; to take the contents of any vessel of liquids particularly. More properly gauge. See GAUGE.

—Nay, but I bar to-night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
To GA'GGLE, v. n. [gaggen, gagelen, Dutch.] To make noise like a goose.

Birds prune their feathers, geese gaggle, and crows seem to call upon rain; which is but the comfort they receive in the relenting of the air. Bacon's Natural History, No. 823.
May fat geese gaggle with melodious voice,
And ne'er want gooseberries or apple-sauce. King.

GA'ITY. See GAYETY.
GAILY, adv. [from gay.]
1. Airily; cheerfully.

2. Splendidly; pompously; with great show.
The ladies gaily dress'd, the Mall adorn
With curious dyes, and paint the sunny morn. Gay's Trivia.
Like some fair flower that early Spring supplies,
That gaily blooms, but ev'n in blooming dies. Pope.

GAIN, n. f. [gain, French.]
1. Profit; advantage.

But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Phil. iii. 7.
Besides the purpose it were now, to teach how victory should be used, or the gains thereof communicated to the general content.

It is in praise of men as in gettings and gains; for light gains make heavy purses; for light gains come thick, whereas great come but now and then. Bacon, Essay 53.
This must be made by some governor upon his own private account, who has a great stock that he is content to turn that way, and is invited by the gain. Temple.

2. Interest; lucrative views.
That fir, which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack, when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shaksp. King Lear.

3. Unlawful advantage.
Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you?

4. Overplus in a comparative computation; any thing opposed to loss.

To GAIN, v. a. [gagner, French.]
1. To obtain as profit or advantage.

Thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortions. Exek. xxii. 12.

2. To have the overplus in comparative computation.
If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

3. To obtain; to procure.
If such a tradition were endeavoured to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult to conceive how ever it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson's Sermons.

4. To obtain increase of any thing allotted.
I know that ye would gain the time, because ye see the king is gone from me. Dan. ii. 8.

5. To obtain whatever good or bad.
Ye should not have looked from Crete, and have gained this harm and loss. Acts xxvii. 21.

6. To win.

GAI

They who were sent to the other pass, after a short resistance, gained it. Clarendon, b. viii.

Fat fees from the defended Umbrian draws,
And only gains the wealthy client's cause. Dryd. Pers. Sat.
O love! for Sylvia let me gain the prize,
And make my tongue victorious as her eyes. Pope's Spring.

7. To draw into any interest or party.
Come, with presents, laden from the port,
To gratify the queen and gain the court. Dryd. Virg. Æn.

If Pyrrhus must be wrought to pity,
No woman does it better than yourself:
If you gain him, I shall comply of course. A. Philij.

8. To reach; to attain.
The West glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the latest traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Death was the post, which I almost did gain:
Shall I once more be tost into the main?
We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it. Addison on Italy.

Thus fav'd from death, they gain the Phœtan shores,
With shatter'd vessels and disabled oars. Pope's Odyssey, b. iii.

9. To GAIN over. To draw to another party or interest.
The court of Hanover should have endeavoured to gain over those who were represented as their enemies. Swift.

To GAIN, v. n.
1. To encroach; to come forward by degrees.

When watchful herons leave their wary stand,
And mounting upward with erected flight,
Gain on the skies, and soar above the fight. Dryd. Virg. Gæ.

On the land while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains. Pope on Criticism.

2. To get ground; to prevail against.
The English have not only gained upon the Venetians in the Levant, but have their cloth in Venice itself. Addison.

3. To obtain influence with.
My good behaviour had gained so far on the emperor, that I began to conceive hopes of liberty. Galliver's Travels.

To GAIN, v. n. To grow rich; to have advantage; to be advanced in interest or happiness.

GAIN, adj. [An old word now out of use.] Handy; ready;
dexterous.

GA'INER, n. f. [from gain.] One who receives profit or advantage.

The client, besides retaining a good conscience, is always a gainer, and by no means can be at any loss, as feeling, if the composition be overhard, he may relieve himself by recourse to his oath. Bacon's Off. of Allocations.

If what I get in empire
I lose in fame, I think myself no gainer. Denham's Suppl.
He that loses any thing, and gets wisdom by it, is a gainer by the loss. L'Estrange, Fables.

By extending a well regulated trade, we are as great gainers by the commodities of many other countries as those of our own nation. Addison's Freeholder.

GAINFUL, adj. [gain and full.]
1. Advantageous; profitable.

He will dazzle his eyes, and bait him in with the luscious propofal of some gainful purchase, some rich match, or advantageous project. South.

2. Lucrative; productive of money.
Nor knows he merchants gainful care. Dryden's Horace.

Thrice sacred muse! commodious precepts gives,
Instructive to the swains, not wholly bent
On what is gainful: sometimes the divers
From solid counsels. Philips.

GA'INFULLY, adv. [from gainful.] Profitably; advantageously.

GA'INFULNESS, n. f. [from gainful.] Profit; advantage.

GA'INGIVING, n. f. [gain and give.] The same as misgiving; a giving against; as gainfaying, which is still in use, is saying against, or contradicting. Hammer.

It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gainfaying as would, perhaps, trouble a woman. Shaksp. Hamlet.

GA'INLESS, adj. [from gain.] Unprofitable; producing no advantage.

GA'INLESSNESS, n. f. [from gainless.] Unprofitableness; want of advantage.

The parallel holds too in the gainfulness as well as labori-ousness of the work: those wretched creatures, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they dugged; no more is the insatiable miser. Decay of Piety.

GA'INLY, adv. [from gain.] Handily; readily; dexterously.

To GA'INSAY, v. a. [gainst and say.]
1. To contradict; to oppose; to controvert with; to dispute against.

Speeches which gainfay one another, must of necessity be applied both unto one and the same subject. Hooker, b. v.

Too facile then, thou didst not much gainfay;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton's P. L.

2. To deny any thing.

I never

GAL

I never heard yet
That any of those bolder wits wanted
Less impudence to gainfay what they did,
Than to perform it first. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

GA'INSAYER, n. f. [from gainfay.] Opponent; adversary.

Such as may satisfy gainfayers, when suddenly, and besides expectation, they require the fame at our hands. Hooker, b. v.

We are, for this cause, challenged as manifest gainfayers of Scripture, even in that which we read for Scripture unto the people. Hooker, b. v. f. 19.

It was full matter of conviction to all gainfayers. Hammond.

GA'INST, prep. [for against.] See AGAINST.

Tremble, ye nations! who, secure before,
Laugh'd at those arms that gainst ourselves we bore. Dryd.

To GA'INSTAND, v. a. [gainst and stand.] To withstand; to oppose; to resist.

Love proved himself valiant, that durst with the sword of reverent duty gainstand the force of so many enraged desires. Sidney, b. ii.

GA'IRISH, adj. [gearrish, to dress fine, Saxon.]
1. Gaudy; showy; splendid; fine.

I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The pretension of but what I was;
A mother, only mock'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast, a gainrigh flag.

To be the aim of every dangerous shot. Shaksp. Rich. III.

There in close covert by some brook,
Where no profane eye may look,
Hide me from day's gainrigh eye. Milton.

2. Extravagantly gay; flighty.

Fame and glory transports a man out of himself: it makes the mind loose and gainrigh, scatters the spirits, and leaves a kind of dissolution upon all the faculties. South's Sermons.

GA'IRISHNESS, n. f. [from gainrigh.]
1. Finery; flaunting gaudiness.

2. Flighty or extravagant joy.

Let your hope be without vanity, or gainrighness of spirit, but sober, grave and silent. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

GA'IT, n. f. [gat, Dutch.]
1. A way; as, gang your gat.

Good youth, address thy gat unto her;
Be not denied access, stand at her door. Shaksp. As You Like It.

2. March; walk.

Nought regarding, they kept on their gat,
And all her vain allurements did forsake. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gat. Hubb. Tale.

3. The manner and air of walking.

Great Juno comes; I know her by her gat. Shaksp. As You Like It.

He had in his person in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preserved in his gat and motion. Clarendon.

A third, who, by his gat
And fierce demeanour, seems the prince of hell. Milton.

Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gat. Milton.

I describ'd his way,
Bent all on speed, and mark'd his airy gat. Milt. Pa. Lost.

GALA'GE, n. f. A shepherd's clog.

My heart-blood is well nigh frome, I feel;
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser's Pastoral.

GALA'NGAL, n. f. [galange, French.] A medicinal root, of which there are two species. The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acid and pungent taste than the smaller fort. They are both brought from the East-Indies; the small kind from China, while it is fresh, by way of spice, season their dishes. The small fort is used with us in medicine as a stomachick, and is an ingredient in almost all bitter infusions and mixtures. Hill.

GA'LA'XY, n. f. [galaxia, galaxie, Fr.] The milky way; a stream of light in the sky.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as flares to thee appear.
Seen in the galaxy. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

A brown, for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd. Cleveland.

Men doubt, because they stand too thick i' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.

We dare not undertake to shew what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy. Bentley's Sermon.

GA'LEANUM, n. f.
We meet with ga'lanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops or tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour: its smell is strong and disagreeable; its taste acrid, nauseous and bitterish. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable

GAL

as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant, whose stalks are about an inch thick, and five or six feet high: its leaves are like the common anise, of a strong smell, and acrid taste; but the flowers, and especially the seeds, much more so. The whole plant abounds with a viscous milky juice, which it yields when wounded, and which soon concretes into substance called galbanum. The plant is frequent in Persia, and in many parts of Africa. Its medicinal virtues are considerable in asthma, coughs, and hysterick complaints. Hill's Materia Medica.

I yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Ezech. xxiv. 15.

GALE, n. f. [gahling, hasty, sudden, German.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale
Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona? Shaksp. As You Like It.

Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd
From their soft wings, and Flora's earliest smells. Milton.

Fresh gales and gentle air.
Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside. Addison.

GA'LEAS, n. f. [galeasse, French.] A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty-two seats for rowers, and six or seven slaves to each. They carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns. Diet.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred gallees, and ten ga-leasses. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

GA'LEATED, adj. [galatus, Latin.]
1. Covered as with a helmet.

A galeated echinus copped, and in shape somewhat more conick than any of the foregoing. Woodward on Fossils.

2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling an helmet, as the monkshood.

GAL'E'GULATE, adj. [from galerus, Latin.] Covered as with a hat.

GA'LIOT, n. f. [galiette, French.] A little galley or fort of brigantine, built very slight and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three paterrocs. It can both sail and row, and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar. Diet.

Barbarossa sent before him Dragut and Corsetus, two notable pyrates, with thirty galiots, who, landing their men, were valiantly encountered by Sarmentus, and forced again to their galiots. Kneller's History of the Turks.

GALL, n. f. [zeala, Saxon; galle, Dutch.]
1. The bile; an animal juice remarkable for its supposed bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,
And take my milk for gall, you murth'ring ministers! Shak.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shaksp. As You Like It.

I drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. Shaksp. King Lear.

This position informs us of a vulgar error, terming the gall bitter, as their proverb more peremptorily implies, 'Tis as bitter as gall; whereas there's nothing puttable sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet favour.

Harvey on Consumption.
Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk: Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar. Brown's Vul. Err.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.

Thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste! Shaksp.

She still insults, and you must still adore;
Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more. Dryd. Juu.

4. Rancour; malignity.

They did grow hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people. Spenser's State of Ireland.

5. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin. [From the verb.]
This is the fatal wound of the tongue, carries least smart, but infinitely more of danger, and is as much superior to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scratch: this may be sore and vexing, but that stupifying and deadening.

Government of the Tongue, f. 8.
6. Anger; bitterness of mind.
Suppose your hero were a lover,
Though he before had gall and rage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and shrinks the blow. Prior.

GAL

7. [From galla.]
Galls or galmuts are a kind of preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on various trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have two kinds, the Oriental and the European galls: the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm and solid texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first fort, both in manufactures and medicine. The general history of galls is this: an insect of the fly kind, for the safety of her young, wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg: the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg of the fly, which, as soon as it is perfect, and in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen on its surface, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within, on breaking it. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries; but this observation should be confined to the medicinal galls; for all these excrescences which we find on this tree in our own woods, and call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true and genuine galls, though less firm in their texture. The true reason of the hard ones not being produced with us, seems to be that we want the peculiar species of insect to which they owe their origin, which is a fly of the ichneumon kind, only found in hot countries. The species of fly that occasions, by its punctures, the soft galls of France and Italy, is different both from the Syrian one and from ours, though still of the ichneumon kind; and we find the several kinds, which occasion the different galls in our own kingdom, produce different kinds, and those of different degrees of hardness, on the same tree. Galls are used in making ink, and in dying and dressing leather, and many other manufactures. In medicine they are very astringent, and good under proper management. Hill. Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 635. Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed. Ray on the Creation. The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them. Derham.
To GALL, v. a. [galer, French.]
1. To hurt by fretting the skin.
I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
His yoke is easy, when by us embrac'd;
But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast. Denham.
A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things. Locke.
On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,
And furious thus, and interrupting spoke,
Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling chain. Pope's Iliad.
2. To impair; to wear away.
He doth object, I am too great of birth;
And that my state being gall'd with my expence,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Shakespeare.
If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses. Ray on the Creation.
3. To tease; to fret; to vex.
In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book. Hooker, b. ii.
What they seem contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us the better, if we espy that it galls them. Hosker, b. iv. f. 9.
When I shew justice,
I pity those I do not know;
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall. Shakespeare.
Let it not gall your patience, good Iago,
That I extend my manners: 'tis my breeding,
That gives me this bold shew of courtesy. Shakespeare, Othello.
All studies here I solemnly dely,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke. Shak H. IV.
No man commits any sin but his conscience finites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the remembrance of it. Tillotson's Sermons.
5. To harrafs; to mischief.
The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shot from corners of streets and house-windows galled them. Sidney.
Light demilances from afar they throw,
Fasten'd with leathern thongs, to gall the foe. Dryd. En.

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows. Addison on the State of the War.
To GALL, v. n. To fret.
I have seen you glecting and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakespeare's Henry V.
GALLANT, adj. [galant, French, from gala, fine dress, Spanish.]
1. Gay; well dressed; showy; splendid; magnificent.
A place of broad rivers, wherein shall go no gally with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby. If. xxxiii. 21.
The gay, the wife, the gallant, and the grave,
Subdu'd alike, all but one passion have. Waller.
2. Brave; high spirited; daring; magnanimous.
Scorn, that any should kill his uncle, made him seek his revenge in manner gallant enough. Sidney, b. ii.
But, fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth. Shakespeare.
A gallant man, whose thoughts fly at the highest game, requires no further insight into them than to satisfy himself by what way they may be performed. Digby on the Soul, Dedicat.
3. Fine; noble; specious.
There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
Make gallant show and promise of their mettle. Shakespeare.
He discour'd, how gallant and how brave a thing it would be for his highness to make a journey into Spain, and to fetch home his mistress. Clarendon.
4. Inclined to courtship.
When first the soul of love is sent abroad,
The gay troops begin
In gallant thought to plume their painted wings. Thomson.
GALLANT, n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. A gay, sprightly, airy, splendid man.
The new proclamation.
—What is't for?
—The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and taylor. Shakespeare.
The gallants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Vastius. Kneller's History of the Turk.
The gallants, to protect the lady's right,
Their fauchions brandish'd at the grisly fright. Dryden.
Gallants, look to't, you fay there are no frights;
But I'll come dance about your beds at night. Dryden.
2. A whoremaster, who caresses women to debauch them.
One, worn to pieces with age, shews himself a young gallant. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
The next carried a handsome young fellow upon her back: he had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison's Spectator.
3. A wooer; one who courts a woman for marriage. In the two latter senses it has commonly the accent on the last syllable.
GALLANTLY, adv. [from gallant.]
1. Gayly; splendidly.
2. Bravely; nobly; generously.
You have not dealt so gallantly with us as we did with you in a parallel case: last year a paper was brought here from England, which we ordered to be burnt by the common hangman. Swift.
GALLANTRY, n. f. [galanterie, French.]
1. Splendour of appearance; show; magnificence; glittering grandeur; ostentatious finery.
Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all
The English youth flock to their admiral. Waller.
2. Bravery; nobleness; generosity.
The eminence of your condition, and the gallantry of your principles, will invite gentlemen to the useful and ennobling study of nature. Glanv. Sceps. Prefat.
3. A number of gallants.
Hector, Deiphobus, and all the gallantry of Troy, I would have arm'd to-day. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.
Courtship; refined address to women.
The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd,
Invent new arts to make their charmers kind. Granoville.
5. Vicious love; lewdness; debauchery.
It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a prostitute; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins.
GALLEASS, n. f. [galass, French.] A large galley; a vessel of war driven with oars.
My father hath no less Than three great argosies, besides two galleos,
And twelve tight galleys. Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew.
The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleasses and galleons seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers. Bacon's War with Spain.
GALLEON, n. f. [galion, French.] A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards. I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidad, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk or set on fire by the Spanish galleons. Raleigh's History. The

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleasses and galleons seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers or castles. Bacon's War with Spain.
GALLERY, n. f. [galerie, French, derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room.]
1. A kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.
In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant arbors, that, one answering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow. Sidney, b. i.
High lifted up were many lofty towers,
And goodly galleries fair overlaid. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Your gallery
Have we pass'd through, not without much content. Shakespeare.
The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all flately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupola's. Bacon.
A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the eye yet known. Denham.
Nor is the shape of our cathedral proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish-churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them. Graunt.
There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison on Italy.
2. The seats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.
While all its throats the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit ascends. Pope's Ep. of Horace.
GALLETYLE, n. f. I suppose this word has the same import with gallipot.
Make a compound body of glass and gallytle; that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcedon, being a stuff between a porcelaine and a glass. Bacon's Phys. Rem.
GALLEY, n. f. [galera, Italian; galere, French; derived, as some think, from galata, a helmet, pictured anciently on the prow; as others from γαλῆρας, the swordfish; as others from galien, expressing in Syriac men exposed to the sea. From galley come galleass, galloon, galley.]
1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.
Great Neptune grieved underneath the load
Of ships, hulks, galleys, barks and brigandines. Fairfax.
In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, and especially far voyages; the rather by the use of galleys, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean. Bacon's New Atlantis.
Jason ranged the coasts of Asia the Leds in an open boat, or kind of galley.
On oozy ground his galleys moor;
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore. Dryden.
2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.
The most voluptuous person, were he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courthips every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to the mines and the galleys for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure. South's Sermons.
GALLEY-SLAVE, n. f. [galley and slave.] A man condemned for some crime to row in the galleys.
As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor man, but he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy. Bramb.
Hardened galley-slaves despise manumission. Decay of Piety.
The furies gently dash against the shore,
Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oar. Garth.
From the Gaulish ard, genius, and gal.
1. A gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.
Selden is a galliard by himself. Clarendon.
2. An active, nimble, spritely dance. It is in both senses now obsolete.
I did think by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a galliard. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night.
There's nought in France
That can be with a nimble galliard won:
You cannot revel into dukedoms there. Shakespeare, Henry V.
If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on; as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards. Bacon.
The tripla's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when galliard time and measure time are in the melody of one dance. Bacon's Natural History.
GALLIARDISE, n. f. [French.] Merriment; exuberant gaiety.
At my nativity my ascendant was the watry sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company. Bacon's Rel. Med.

GALLICISM, n. f. [gallicisme, French, from gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language; such as, he figured in controversy; he held this conduct; he held the same language that another had held before; with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Bolinbroke.
In English I would have Gallicism avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech. Pelton on the Classics.
GALLIGASKINS, n. f. [Calige Gallo-Vasconum. Skinner.] Large open hole.
My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The Winter's fury, and encroaching frosts,
By time subdu'd, what will not time subdue,
An horrid chafin disclose. Phillips.
GALLIMATHIA, n. f. [gallimathias, French.] Nonsense; talk without meaning.
GALLIMAUFRY, n. f. [gallimaufree, French.]
1. A hodge-podge, or hodge of several sorts of broken meat; a medley.
They have made of our English tongue a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in't. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
The painter who, under pretence of diverting the eyes, would fill his picture with such varieties as alter the truth of history, would make a ridiculous piece of painting, and a mere gallimaufry of his work. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
3. It is used by Shakespeare ludicrously of a woman.
Sir John affects thy wife.
—Why, sir, my wife is not young.
—He woos both high and low, both rich and poor;
He loves thy gallimaufry, friend. Shakespeare.
GALLIOT, n. f. [galiete, French.] A small swift galley.
Barbarossa departing out of Hellepontus with eighty galleys, and certain galliots, shaped his course towards Italy. Kneller.
GALLIPOT, n. f. [gleye, Dutch, shining earth. Skinner.] The true derivation is from gala, Spanish, finery. Gala, or gallypot, is a fine painted pot. A pot painted and glazed, commonly used for medicines.
Plato said his master Socrates was like the apothecary's gallipot, that had on the outside apes, owls, and satyrs; but within, precious drugs. Bacon, Apophth. 227.
Here phials in nice discipline are fet;
There gallipots are rang'd in alphabet. Garth's Dispensatory.
Alexandrinus thought it unsafe to trust the real secret of his phial and gallipot to any man. Spectator, N^o. 426.

GALLOON, n. f. [galon, French.] A kind of close lace, made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.
To GALLUP, v. n. [galoper, French. Derived by all the etymologists, after Budaus, from καλπαζεν; but perhaps it comes from gaut, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed.]
1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.
I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was't came by? Shak. Macb.
His steeds will be restrain'd,
But gallop lively down the western hill. Donne.
In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain
His heav'nly limbs, and flow'd with such a mane,
When half surpris'd, and fearing to be seen,
The leacher gallop'd from his jealous queen. Dryden's Virgil.
2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.
Seeing such streams of blood as threaten'd a drowning life,
We galloped toward them to part them. Sidney, b. ii.
They can espy
An armed knight towards them gallop fast,
That seem'd from some feared foe to fly. Fairy Queen, b. i.
He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed. Locke.
3. To move very fast.
The golden sun salutes the morn,
And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiack in his glistering coach. Shak. Tit. Andr.
Whom doth time gallop withal?
—With a thief to the gallows. Shakespeare, As you like it.
He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it. Locke.
GALLUP, n. f. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he

he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forwards, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once.

Farrier's Dict.

GALLOPER. n. f. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet.

Martin. Hist.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

GALLOWAY. n. f. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the North, probably as coming originally from Galloway, ashire in Scotland.

To GALLOW. v. a. [agelpān, to fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to fright.

The wrathful skies

Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark,

And make them keep their caves. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GALLOWGLASSES. n. f.

It is worth then likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen call gallowglasses; the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallow signifies an English fervitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armatura; and was instead of the footman that now weareth a corset, before the corset was used, or almost invented.

Spenser on Ireland.

2. [Hanner, otherwise than Spenser.] Soldiers among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback.

A puissant and mighty pow'r

Of gallowglasses and stout kernes,

Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shakef. Henry VI.

GALLOW. v. f. [It is used by some in the singular; but by GALLOW. more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowes. Gallow, Gothic; gallow, Saxon; gallow, Dutch; which some derive from gallow, furca, Latin; others from gallow high; others from gallow, Welsh, power: but it is probably derived like gallow, to fright, from agelpān, the gallow being the great object of legal terror.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money.

Sidney, l. ii.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gallowes and gallowes. Shakef. Cymbel.

I prophesied, if a gallow were on land,

This fellow could not drown. Shakef. Henry VI.

A little before dinner he took the major aside, and whispered him in the ear, that execution must that day be done in the town, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected.

Hayward.

A production that naturally groweth under gallowes, and places of execution.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, l. ii.

A poor fellow, going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of whips while he is upon Tyburn road.

Suif.

2. A wretch that deserves the gallows.

Cupid hath been five thousand years a boy.

Shakef. Henry VI.

GALLOWFREE. adj. [gallow and free.] Exempt by destiny from being hanged.

Let him be gallowfree by my consent,

And nothing suffer, since he nothing meant. Dryden.

GALLOWTREE. n. f. [gallow and tree.] The tree of terror; the tree of execution.

He hung their conquer'd arms, for more defence,

On gallowtrees, in honour of his dearest dame. Fai. Queen.

A Scot, when from the gallowtree got loose,

Drops into Styx, and turns a island goose. Cleaveland.

GAMBADE. n. f. [gamba, Italian, a leg.] Spatterdashes; GAMBADE. boots worn upon the legs above the shoe.

The pettifogger ambles to her in his gambades once a week.

Dennis's Letters.

GAMBLER. n. f. [A cant word, I suppose, for game or gamester.]

A knave whose practice it is to invite the unwary to game and cheat them.

GAMBOGE. n. f.

Gamboge is a concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a resinous nature. It is heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America, and from many parts of the East Indies, particularly from Cambaja, or Cambogia, whence it has its name. Gamboge was not known in Europe till 1603, and soon after got into use as a purgative medicine; but the roughness of its operation rendering it less esteemed as such, it got into use in painting, where it yet retains its credit.

Hill.

To GAMBOLE. v. n. [gamboller, French.]

1. To dance; to skip; to frisk; to jump for joy; to play merry frolics.

Bears, tigers, ounces, pards,

Gambol'd before them. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

GAM

The king of elfs, and little fairy queen,

Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

The monsters of the flood

Gambol around him in the wat'ry way,

And heavy whales in awkward measures play. Pope.

2. To leap; to flit.

'Tis not madnels

That I have utter'd; bring me to the test,

And I the matter will record, which madnels

Would gambol from. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

GAMBOT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A skip; a hop; a leap for joy.

A gentleman had got a favourite spaniel, that would be still toying and leaping upon him, and playing a thousand pretty gambols.

L'Estrange's Fables.

Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,

And beafts in gambols frisk'd before their honest god. Dryden.

2. A frolick; a wild prank.

For who did ever play his gambol's,

With such insufferable rambles? Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 2.

GAMBRIL. n. f. [from gamba, gambarella, Italian.] The leg of a horse.

What can be more admirable than for the principles of the fibres of a tendon to be so mixed as to make it a soft body, and yet to have the strength of iron? as appears by the weight which the tendon, lying on a horse's gambrel, doth then command, when he rears up with a man upon his back. Green.

GAMME. n. f. [gamm, a jest, Islandick.]

1. Sport of any kind.

We have had pastimes here, and pleasing game. Shakef.

2. Jest, opposed to earnest or seriousness.

Then on her head they set a garland green,

And crown'd her 'twixt earnest and 'twixt game. Fai. Qu.

3. Insolent merriment; sportive insult.

Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels,

On my refusal, to distress me more;

Or make a game of my calamities. Milton's Agonistes.

4. A single match at play.

5. Advantage in play.

Mutual vouchers for our fame we stand,

And play the game into each other's hand. Dryden.

6. Scheme pursued; measures planned.

This seems to be the present game of that crown, and that they will begin no other 'till they see an end of this. Templ.

7. Field sports; as, the chase, falconry.

If about this hour he make his way,

Under the colour of his usual game,

He shall here find his friends with horse and men.

To let him free from his captivity. Shakef. Henry VI.

What arms to use, or nets to frame

Wild beafts to combat, or to tame,

With all the myrtles of that game. Waller.

Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon game, spied a company of bustards and cranes.

L'Estrange.

8. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportsmen.

Hunting, and men, not beafts, shall be his game,

With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse

Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton's Parad. Lost.

There is such a variety of game springing up before me, that I am distracted in my choice, and know not which to follow.

Dryden's Fables, Preface.

A bloodhound will follow the track of the person he pursues, and all hounds the particular game they have in chase.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

Go, with thy Cynthia hurl the pointed spear

At the rough bear, or chase the flying deer;

I and my Chloe take a nobler aim.

At human hearts we sling, nor ever miss the game. Prior.

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began,

A mighty hunter, and his prey was man;

Our haughty Norman boasts that barb'rous name,

And makes his trembling slaves the royal game. Pope.

9. Solemn contests exhibited as spectacles to the people.

The games are done, and Caesar is returning. Shakef. Henry VI.

Milo, when entering the Olympick game,

With a huge ox upon his shoulders came. Deukam.

To GAME. v. n. [gaman, Saxon.]

1. To play at any sport.

2. To play wantonly and extravagantly for money.

Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it: it is no way profits either body or mind.

GAMMECOCK. n. f. [game and cock.] Cocks bred to fight.

They managed the dispute as fiercely as two gamecocks in the pit.

L'Estrange.

GAME-EGG. n. f. [game and egg.] Eggs from which fighting cocks are bred.

Thus boys hatch game-eggs under birds of prey,

To make the fowl more furious for the fray. Garth.

GAMMEKEEPER. n. f. [game and keep.] A person who looks after game, and sees it is not destroyed.

GAMESOME.

GAN

GAMESOME. adj. [from game.] Frolicsome; gay; sportive; playful; sportful.

Geron, though old, yet gamesome, kept one end with Cosim. Sidney.

I am not gamesome; I do lack some part

Of that quick spirit that is in Antony. Shakef. Jul. Caesar.

The gamesome wind among her tresses plays,

And curleth up those growing riches short. Fairfax, b. iv.

Belial, in like gamesome mood. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This gamesome humour of children should rather be encouraged, to keep up their spirits and improve their strength and health, than curbed or restrained. Locke.

GAMESOMENESS. n. f. [from gamesome.] Sportiveness; merriment.

GAMESOMELY. adv. [from gamesome.] Merrily.

GAMSTER. n. f. [from game.]

1. One who is vitiously addicted to play.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

A gamester, the greater master he is in his art, the worse man he is. Bacon.

Gamesters for whole patrimonies play;

The steward brings the deeds, which must convey

The whole estate. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 1.

Could we look into the mind of a common gamester, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and mattadores: her slumbers are haunted with kings, queens and knaves. Addison.

All the superfluous whims relate,

That fill a female gamester's pate;

What agony of soul she feels

To see a knave's inverted heels. Swift.

2. One who is engaged at play.

When lenity and cruelty play for kingdoms,

The gentler gamester is the soonest winner. Shakef. Hen. V.

A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester sees always more than a looker-on; but, when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business fruit.

Bacon, Essay 28.

3. A merry frolicsome person.

You're a merry gamester,

My lord Sands. Shakef. Henry VIII.

4. A prostitute.

She's impudent, my lord,

And was a common gamester to the camp. Shakef. Henry VI.

GAMMER. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology; perhaps from grand mere, and therefore used commonly to old women.] The compellation of a woman corresponding to gaffer.

GAMMON. n. f. [gambone, Italian.]

1. The buttock of an hog salted and dried; the lower end of the flitch.

All for what price thy venal tongue was sold:

A rusty gammon of some seven years old. Dryden's Juvenal.

Gammons, that give a relish to the taste,

And ported fowl, and fish, come in so salt,

That ere the first is out, the second stinks. Dryden's Pers.

2. A kind of play with dice.

The quick dice,

In thunder leaping from the box, awake

The founding gammon. Thomson's Autumn.

GAMUT. n. f. [gama, Italian.] The scale of musical notes.

Madam, before you touch the instrument,

To learn the order of my fingering,

I must begin with rudiments of art,

To teach you gamut in a briefer sort. Shakef. Henry VI.

When by the gamut some musicians make

A perfect song, others will undertake,

By the same gamut chang'd, to equal it:

Things simply good can never be unfit. Deane.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,

That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;

In songs and airs express their martial fire,

Combat in tilts, and in a feuge expire. Addison.

GAN, for ganon, from gan for ganon.

The noble knight gan feel

His vital force to faint. Spenser.

To GANCH. v. a. [ganchare, from gancha, a hook, Italian; ganche, French.] To drop from a high place upon hooks by way of punishment: a practice in Turkey, to which Smith alludes in his Poecikius.

Cohors catenis qua pia stridulis

Gemunt onuli, vel fude trans finum

Luctantur acta, pendulive

Sanguineis luctantur in unes. Musee Angl.

GANDER. n. f. [gandra, Saxon.] The male of the goose.

As deep drinketh the goose as the gander. Camden's Rem.

One gander will serve five geese. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GANG. v. n. [gangan, Dutch; gangan, Saxon; gang, Scottish.] To go; to walk: a word not now used, except ludicrously.

But let them gang alone,

As they have brewed, so let them bear blame. Spenser.

GAO

Your flaunting beaus gang with their breasts open. Arbutnot.

GANG. n. f. [from the verb.] A number herding together; a troop; a company; a tribe; a herd. It is seldom used but in contempt or abhorrence.

Oh, you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy against me. Shakef. Merry Wives of Windsor.

As a gang of thieves were robbing a house, a mastiff fell

GAP

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when
The stealer galer is the friend of men. Sh. Meaf. for Meaf.
I know not how or why my furry galer,
Hard as his irons, and insolent as pow'r
When put in vulgar hands, Cleanthes, Put off the brute. Dryden's Cleomenes.
From the polite part of mankind he had been banished and immured, 'till the death of her galer Tatler, N^o. 53.
GAP. n. f. [from gape.]

1. An opening in a broken fence.
Behold the despair,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tuffer's Husbandry.
With terrors and with furies to the bounds
And crystal wall of heav'n; which, opening wide,
Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclosed
Into the wasteful deep. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
Buffets are most lasting of any for dead hedges, or to mend gaps. Mortimer's Husbandry.
I fought for a man, says God, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me, for the land that I should not destroy it. Reger's Sermon 18.

2. A breach.
The loss of that strong city concerned the Christian commonweal: manifold and lamentable miseries afterwards enfused by the opening of that gap, not unto the kingdom of Hungary only, but to all that side of Christendom. Knollys.
3. Any passage.
He's made master
O' th' rolls and the king's secretary: further Stands in the gap, and treads for more preferment. Shaksp.
So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him ruffling in the wood. Dryden.
4. An avenue; an open way.
The former kings of England passed into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well deferred, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well flopt. Spenser.
5. A hole; a deficiency.
If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour. Shak. King Lear.
Nor is it any botch or gap at all in the works of nature.
Mare's Antidote against Atheism.

6. Any interstice; a vacuity.
Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were differ'd. Shakspere's Winter's Tale.
That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away. Shakspere's Ant. and Cleopatra.
To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps,
Wide as meridians in maps. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.
One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing. Swift's Gentle Conversation.
7. An opening of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.
The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels opening on each other. Pope.
8. To gap a GAP, is to escape by some mean shift: alluding to hedges mended with dead bushes, 'till the quickets will grow.
His policy consists in setting traps. Swift.
In finding ways and means, and gapping gaps.
GAP-TOOTHED. adj. [from gap and tooth.] Having interstices between the teeth.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other as much as the mincing lady prioress and the broad-speaking gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
To GAPÉ. v. n. [from gape, Saxon.]
1. To open the mouth wide; to yawn.
Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad, if they behold a cat. Shakspere.
Gaping or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that causeth gaping and stretching is from the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour. Arbutnot.
She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes,
And asks if it be time to rise. Swift.
2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.
As callow birds,
Whose mother's kill'd in seeking of the prey,
Cry in their nest, and think her long away;
And at each least that flies, each blast of wind,
Gap for the food which they must never find. Dryden.
As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain;
Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.
3. To desire earnestly; to crave. With for.
To her grim death appears in all her shapes;
The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes.
To thy fortune be not thou a slave;
For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave?

GAR

And thou, who gap'st for my estate, draw near;
For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear. Dryden's Pers.
4. With after.
What shall we say of those who spend their days in gaping after court-favour and preferments?
5. With at.
Many have gaped at the church revenues; but, before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stopped in the church-yard. Saull's Sermon.
6. To open in fissures or holes.
If it assume my noble father's person,
I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape
And bid me hold my peace. Shakspere's Hamlet.
May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father. Sh. H. VI.
The great horse-muffel, with the fine shell, doth gape and shut as the oysters do. Bacon's Natural History.
The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. Saith.
The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vessels. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

7. To open with a breach.
The planks, their pitchy coverings wash'd away,
Now yield, and now a yawning breach display:
The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,
Rush through the ruins of her gaping side. Dryden.
That all these actions can be performed by aliment, as well as medicines, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound. Arbutnot.
8. To open; to have an hiatus.
There is not, to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on another for want of a cesura in this whole poem.
Dryden's An. Dedication.

9. To make a noise with open throat.
And, if my muse can through past ages see,
That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool is he. Reformen.
10. To stare with hope or expectation.
Others will gape 't anticipate
The cabinet designs of fate;
Apply to wizards, to foretell
What shall, and what shall never be. Hudibras, p. ii.
11. To stare with wonder.
Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dawner; and the end of all this to cause laughter: a very monster in a Bartholomew fair, for the mob to gape at. Dryden's Dufresny.
Where elevated o'er the gaping croud,
Clasp'd in the board the perjurd head is bow'd, Betimes retreat. Gay's Trivia.

12. To stare irreverently.
They have gaped upon me with their mouth. Jib xvi. 10.
GAPER. n. f. [from gape.]
1. One who opens his mouth.
2. One who stares foolishly.
3. One who longs or craves.
The golden shower of the dissolved abbey-lands rained well near into every gaper's mouth. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
GAR, in Saxon, signifies a weapon: so Eadgar is a happy weapon; Ethelgar, a noble weapon. Gibson's Camden.
To GAR. v. a. [from gier, Islandick.] To cause; to make. It is still in use in Scotland.
Tell me, good Hobbinol, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?
Or is thy baggage broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lols forlorn? Spenser's Pastoral.

GARB. n. f. [from garbe, French.]
1. Dress; cloaths; habit.
Thus Belial, with words cloth'd in reason's garb, Counsell'd ignoble ease, and peaceful sloth. Milton's Paradise Lost.
He puts himself into the garb and habit of a professor of physick, and sets up. L'Estrange, Fable 37.
2. Fashion of dress.
Horace's wit, and Virgil's state,
He did not steal, but emulate;
And when he would like them appear,
Their garb, but not their cloaths, did wear. Denham.
3. Exterior appearance.
This is some fellow,
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect
A faucy roughness, and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature. Shakspere's King Lear.
GARBAGE. n. f. [from garb, Spanish.] This etymology is very doubtful.

1. The bowels; the offal; that part of the inwards which is separated and thrown away.
The cloyed will,
That satiate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub

GARBISH. n. f. Corrupted from garbage.
In Newfourdland they improve their ground with the gar- bish of fish. Mo tim's Husbandry.
To GARBLE. v. a. [from garbellare, Italian.] To sift; to part;
to separate the good from the bad.
But you who fathers and traditions take,
And garble some, and some you quite forsake. Dryden.
Had our author set down this command without garbling, as God gave it, and joined mother to father, it had made directly against him. Locke.
The understanding works to collate, combine, and garble
the images and ideas, the imagination and memory present to
it. Chapin's Phil. Princ.
GARBLES. n. f. [from garble.] He who separates one part from another.

A farther secret in this clause may best be discovered by the projectors, or at least the garblers of it. Swift's Examiner.
GARBOL. n. f. [from garballe, French; ga-buglio, Italian.] Disorder; tumult; uproar. Hannmer.
Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read
What garbolls the awak'd.
GARD. n. f. [from garde, French.] Wardship; care; custody.
GARDEN. n. f. [from gard, Welsh; jardin, French; giardino, Italian.]

1. A piece of ground inclosed, and cultivated with extraordinary care, planted with herbs or fruits for food, or laid out for pleasure.
Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
Which one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next. Shaksp.
My lord of Elly, when I was last in Holbourn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there. Shaksp. R. III.
In the royal ordering of gardens, there ought to be gardens for all the months in the year. Bacon's Essays.
In every garden should be provided flowers, fruit, shade and water. Temple.

2. A place particularly fruitful or delightful.
I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy. Shak. Tam. of the Shrew.
3. GARDEN is often used in composition for horticulturist, or belonging to a garden.
GARDEN-MOULD. n. f. Mould fit for a garden.
They delight most in rich black garden-mould, that is deep and light, and mixed rather with sand than clay. Mortimer.
GARDEN-TILLAGE. n. f. Tillage used in cultivating gardens.
Peas and beans are what belong to garden tillage as well as that of the field. Mortimer's Husbandry.
GARDEN-WARE. n. f. The produce of gardens.
A clay bottom is a much more pernicious soil for trees and garden-ware than gravel. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To GARDEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To cultivate a garden;
to lay out gardens.

At first, in Rome's poor age,
When both her kings and consuls held the plough,
Or garden'd well. Ben. Jonson's Catiline.
When ages grow to civility and elegance, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely; as if gardening were the greater perfection. Bacon, Essay 47.
GARDENER. n. f. [from garden.] He that attends or cultivates gardens.
Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce, the power lies in our will. Shakspere's Othello.
Gardeners tread down any loose ground, after they have sown onions or turnips.
The gardener may lop religion as he please. Howell.
The life and felicity of an excellent gardener is preferable to all other diversions. Living's Calendar.
Then let the learned gardener mark with care
The kinds of stocks, and what those kinds will bear. Dryd.
GARDENING. n. f. [from garden.] The act of cultivating or planting gardens.
My compositions in gardening are after the Pindarick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without the palate. Bacon's Natural History.

To GARGARIZE. v. a. [from gargareo, Greek; gargariser, French.]
To wash the mouth with medicated liquors.

Vinegar, put to the nostrils, or gargarized, doth ease the hiccough; for that it is astringent, and inhibiteth the motion of the spirit. Bacon's Natural History.
This being relaxed, may make a shaking of the larynx;
as when we gargarize. Holder's Elements of Speech.
GARGET. n. f. A distemper in cattle.

The garget appears in the head, maw, or in the hinder parts. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To GARGLE. v. a. [from garguiller, French; gargogliare, Ital.
gurgel, German, the throat.]
1. To wash the throat with some liquor not suffered immediately to descend.

Garg twice or thrice with sharp oxyerate. Harvey.
The excision made, the bleeding will soon be stoppt by gar- ging with oxyerate. Wise man's Surgery.
They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;
Next gargie well their throats. Dryden's Pers. Sat.

head, moist eyes, staggering, and loss of appetite. Mortimer.
GARLAND. n. f. [from garlands, French.] A wreath of branches or flowers.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree,
A garland made, on temples for to wear;
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village-lord that Whitfuntide to bear. Sidney.
With every minute you do change a mind,
And call him noble, that was now your hate,
Him vile, that was your garland. Shakspere.
A reeling world will never stand upright,
'Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.
—How! wear the garland! do'st thou mean the crown?
—Ay, my good lord. Shakspere's Richard III.

Then party-colour'd flow'rs of white and red
She wove, to make a garland for her head. Dryden's Fables.
Vanquish again; though she be gone,
Whole garland crown'd the victor's hair,
And reign; though she has left the throne,
Who made thy glory worth thy care. Prior.
Her gods and goddesses heroes rise to view,
And all her faded garlands bloom anew. Pope.

GARLICK. n. f. [from gar, Saxon, a lance, and lick, the leek that shoots up in blades. Skinners.]
It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats: the leaves are plain: the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corymbus on the top of the stalk;
and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds. Milner.
Garlick is of an extremely strong, and to most people a disagreeable smell, and of an acrid and pungent taste. It is an extremely active and penetrating medicine, as may be proved by applying plaisters of garlick to the soles of the feet, which illues will in a very little time give a strong smell to the breath.
Illues will smell strongly of garlick three or four hours after a person has eaten it; and given to fowls, it communicates its taste strongly to their flesh, and in some degree to their eggs.
Bruised, and laid on any tender part of the skin, it corrodes it, and raises blisters. Some are very fond of it in food; and a little of it is not only agreeable this way, but affords digestion, and strengthens the stomach. Will.
Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh. Temple.

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;
Each clove of gar-ick is a sacred pow'r;
Religious nations sure, and blest abodes,
Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods. Tate's Juven.
GARLICK Pear-tree. n. f.
It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of four petals or leaves, which stand erect, the lower part being occupied by a number of chives: the pointal, which is fixed on a long foot-stalk,

GAR

stalk, rises from the centre of the empalement, and afterward becomes a globular fleshy fruit; in the centre of which are included many seeds, which are shaped almost like kidneys. This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places in the warmer parts of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the pointal, it becomes a round fruit about the size of a tennis ball, which, when ripe, has a rough brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp, somewhat like some of the European pears; but has a strong scent of garlic.

Garlick Wild. n. f.

The characters are: it agrees in every respect with the garlic; but hath, for the most part, a sweet scent; and the flowers are produced in an umbel.

Garlickeater. n. f. [from garlick and eat.] A mean fellow.

You've made good work,

You and your apron men, that stood so much

Upon the voice of occupation, and

The breath of garlick eaters.

Garment. n. f. [from garment, old French.] Any thing by which the body is covered; cloths; drefs.

Hence, rotten things, or I shall shake thy bones

Out of thy garments.

When he comes forth he will make their cows and garraus

to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons.

Every man would be forced to provide Winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garraus shift upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds,

so that the race of garraus would decrease.

Garret. n. f. [from garret, French.] A room on the highest floor of the house.

The mob, commissi'd by the government,

Are seldom to an empty garret sent.

John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret.

On earth the god of wealth was made

Sole patron of the building trade;

Leaving the arts the spacious air;

With licence to build castles there;

And 'tis conceiv'd their old pretence,

To lodge in garrets, comes from thence.

Rotten wood.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by daylight, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret.

Garrete'er. n. f. [from garret.] An inhabitant of a garret.

Garrison. n. f. [from garrison, French.]

1. Soldiers placed in a fortified town or castle to defend it.

How oft he said to me,

Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garrison.

2. Fortified place stored with soldiers.

Whom the old Roman wall so ill confin'd,

With a new chain of garrisons you bind.

loquacity or garrulity.

GARRULOUS. adj. [from garrulus, Latin.] Prating; talkative.

Old age looks out,

And garrulous recounts the feats of youth.

GARTER. n. f. [from garter, French, from garter,

Welsh, the binding of the knee.]

1. A string or ribband by which the stocking is held upon the leg.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit.

When we rest in our cloaths we loosen our garters, and other ligatures, to give the spirits free passage.

Handsome garters at your knees.

2. There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,

And all the trophies of his former loves.

3. The mark of the order of the garter, the highest order of English knighthood.

Now by my George, my garter.

—The George, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour;

The garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue.

4. Penitencia carceraria; an acknowledgment in money when first a prisoner goes into a goal.

GAR

GARNISHMENT. n. f. [from garnish.] Ornament; embellishment.

The church of Santa Guitiniana in Padoua is a found piece of good art, where the materials being but ordinary stone, without any garnishment of sculpture, do ravish the beholders.

Wotton's Architecture.

GARNITURE. n. f. [from garnish.] Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in the garniture of their knees, that they are inferior in the furniture of their heads.

Government of the Tongue.

Plain sense, which pleas'd your fires an age ago,

Is lost, without the garniture of show.

As nature has poured out her charms upon the female part of our species, so they are very studious in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art.

Garrous. adj. [from garum.] Resembling pickle made of fish.

In a civet-cat a different and offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish; whereof this humour may be a garous excretion, and odious separation.

Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 4.

GARRAN. n. f. [Erse. It imports the same as gelding. The word is still retained in Scotland.] A small horse; a hobby.

A Highland horse which when brought into the North of England takes the name of garraus.

When he comes forth he will make their cows and garraus

to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons.

Every man would be forced to provide Winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garraus shift upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds,

so that the race of garraus would decrease.

Garret. n. f. [from garret, French.] A room on the highest floor of the house.

The mob, commissi'd by the government,

Are seldom to an empty garret sent.

John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret.

On earth the god of wealth was made

Sole patron of the building trade;

Leaving the arts the spacious air;

With licence to build castles there;

And 'tis conceiv'd their old pretence,

To lodge in garrets, comes from thence.

Rotten wood.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by daylight, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret.

The garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue.

4. Penitencia carceraria; an acknowledgment in money when first a prisoner goes into a goal.

GAS

You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,
To fill in future times his father's place,
And wear the garter of his mother's race.

Dryden.

3. The principal king at arms.

To GARTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a garter.

He, being in love, could not see to garter his hose.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

A person was wounded in the leg, below the gartering

place.

Wife's Surgery.

GARTH. n. f. [as if girth, from gird.] The bulk of the body measured by the girdle.

GAS. n. f. [A word invented by the chymists.] It is used by Van Helmont, and seems designed to signify, in general, a spirit not capable of being coagulated: but he uses it loosely in many senses, and very unintelligibly and inconsistently.

Har.

GASCONADE. n. f. [French, from Gascon, a nation eminent for boasting.] A boast; a bravado.

Was it a gasconade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased to one hundred a year since I left you?

Swift.

To GASCONADE. v. n. [from the noun.] To boast; to brag;

to bluster.

To GASH. v. a. [from hatch, to cut, French, Scimmer.] To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.

Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gashed or gored to death.

Wit is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it; but to carve a beautiful image requires great art.

Willson, Sermon 2.

See me gash'd with knives,

Or fear'd with burning steel.

Screaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds,

He reel'd, he groan'd, and at the altar fell.

A. Phillips.

GASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A deep and wide wound.

He glancing on his helmet, made a large

And open gash therein; were not his target,

That broke the violence of his intent,

The weary soul from thence it would discharge.

A perilous gash, a very limb lost off.

Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the lifts; but

Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground.

But th' ethereal substance clos'd,

Not long divisible; and from the gash

A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd.

Milt. P. Left.

2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.

I was fond of back-sword and cudgel play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and scar.

Arbutnot.

GASKINS. n. f. [from Gaskine. See GALLIGASKINS.]

Wide hose; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.

If one point break, the other will hold;

Or, if both break, your gaskins fall.

Shak. Twelfth Night.

To GASP. v. n. [from gape, Skinner; from gisse, Danish, to gape, Junius.]

1. To open the mouth wide to catch breath.

The sick for air before the portal gasp.

They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes;

But the weak voice deceiv'd their gaping throats.

The gaping head flies off; a purple flood

Flows from the trunk.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;

The breath they drew no longer air, but fire.

A scantling of wit lay gaping for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish.

Pale and faint,

Me gasp for breath; and, as his life flows from him,

Demands to see his friends.

2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convuls

GAU

13. To collect logically; to know by inference.
That which, out of the law either of reason or of God, men probably gathering to be expedient, they make it law.
Hooker, b. i. f. 3.

The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance. Shakespeare.
After he had seen the vision, we endeavoured to get into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us.
Acts xvi. 10.

Return'd
By night, and listening where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint, Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
Mademoiselle de Scudery, who is as old as Sibyl, is at this time translating Chaucer into modern French: from which I gather, that he has formerly been translated into the old Provençal. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
We may easily gather from this passage what notion the ancients had concerning a future state. Notes on the Odyssey.

14. To GATHER breath. [A proverbial expression.] To have respite from any calamity.

The luckless lucky maid
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath, in many miseries. Spenser.

- To GATHER, v. n.
1. To be condensed; to thicken.

If ere night the gathering clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear. Dryden's Fable.
When gathering clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys! he cries. Dry.
When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, East and West, on airy couriers born,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn. Dryden.
Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it. Addison's Cato.
2. To grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.
Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came in to them. Bacon's Henry VIII.

3. To assemble.
There be three things that mine heart feareth; the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation. Ecclesiast. xxvi. 5.

4. To generate pus or matter.
Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the ease of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it. Decay of Piety.
GATHER, n. f. [from the verb.] Pucker; cloth drawn together in wrinkles.

Give laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches, and the gathers,
Part: cannons, periwigs and feathers. Hudibras, p. i.

- GATHERER, n. f. [from gather.]

1. One that gathers; one that collects; a collector.
I will spend this preface about those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer and disposer of other men's stuff. Watson's Preface to Elem. of Architecture.

2. One that gets in a crop of any kind.
I was a herdman and a gatherer of sycamore-fruit. Amos vii.

Do poisonous herbs deceive the gatherer's hand. May's Virg.
GATHERING, n. f. [from gather.] Collection of charitable contributions.

Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gatheringings when I come. 1 Cor. xvi. 2.
GATTIN-TREE. See CORNELIAN-CHERRY, of which it is a species.

GAUDE, n. f. [The etymology of this word is uncertain: Skinner imagines it may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks of gaude; and Mr. Lye finds gaude, in Longfist, to signify deceit or fraud, from gaudio, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy; a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure. In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a throwy bowle, and the person fooled. It is also retained in Scotland to denote a yellow flower.] An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy.

He stole the impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gauds, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats. Shakespeare.
The fun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gauds,
To give me audience. Shakespeare's King Lear.

My love to Hermia
Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaud,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon. Shakespeare.

GAU

Some bound for Guiney, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gauds the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbans finest holland tear. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.
To GAUDE, v. a. [gaudeo, Latin.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing.

Go to a gossip's feast, and gaud with me,
After so long grief such nativity. Shakespeare.
GAUDERY, n. f. [from gaudere.] Finery; ostentatious luxury of dress.

The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was. Bacon's Essays.
Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flourishing garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with cloaths as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. South's Sermons.

A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tarred and known. Dryden.

- GAUDILY, adv. [from gaudy.] Showily.

GAUDINESS, n. f. [from gaudy.] Showiness; tinsel appearance.

GAUDY, adj. [from gaudy.] Showy; splendid; pompous;
ostentatiously fine.

Cottily thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not exprest in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless
As the gay motes that people the fun-beams. Milton.
A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumage, that hopp'd from side to side. Dr. den.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Phillips.

GAUDY, n. f. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast; a festival; a day of plenty.
He may surely be content with a fast to-day, that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Chapman.

- GAVE, v. n. [The preterite of give.]

Thou canst not every day give me thy heart;
If thou canst give it, then thou never gav'st it:
Lovers riddles are, that though thy heart depart,
It stays at home, and thou with losing gav'st it. Donne.

GAVER, n. f. [A provincial word for ground.]

Let it lie upon the ground or gaver eight or ten days. Mort.

GAVERKIND, n. f. [In law.] A custom whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death amongst all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own. This custom is of force in divers places of England, and especially in Kent. Caval.

Among other Welsh customs he abolished that of gaverkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bairds did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavelkind. Dryden on Ireland.

To GAUGE, v. a. [gaugere, French, a measuring rod, French. It is pronounced gage.]

1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.
2. To measure with regard to any proportion.

The vases nicely gaud on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derham's Physico-Theology.

There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer's battles of taking measure or gaging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel. Pope's Essay on Homer's Iliad.

GAUGE, n. f. [from the verb.] A measure; a standard.

This plate must be a gauge to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by. Mason's Math. Exerc.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gauge of your trade and wealth. Lee.
Timothy provided for his mistress, that she should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high; and for that purpose had prepared a gauge, by which they were to be measured. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

GAUGER, n. f. [from gauge.] One whose business is to measure vessels or quantities.

Those curls and dukes have, from the beginning, been privileged with royal jurisdiction; and, to this end, appointed their special officers, as sheriffs, admirals, gaugers, and echequers.
Caval's Survey of Cornwall.

GAUNT, adj. [As if gaunt, from gean, Saxon, to lessen, Saxon.]

Thin; slender; lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old:
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who ab stains from meat that is not gaunt? For

GAZ

For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon,
Is my strict fast; I mean my childrens looks;
And therein fasting, thou hast made me gaunt:
Canst am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whole hollow womb inherits nought but bones. Sh. R. II.
Two maffiss, gaunt and grim, her sight pursu'd,
And oft their fallen'd fangs in blood emsu'd. Dryd. Fables.

GAUNTLY, adv. [from gaunt.] Leanly; slenderly; meagerly.

GAUNTLET, n. f. [gantlet, French.] An iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is sometimes in poetry used for the casque, or boxing glove.

A fealy gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

Feel but the difference, soft and rough;
This a gauntlet, that a muff. Cleaveland.

Some shall in swiftsness for the goal contend,
And others try the twanging bow to bend;

The strong with iron gauntlets arm'd shall stand,
Oppos'd in combat, on the yellow sand. Dryd. Virg. Æn.

Who naked wrestled best, befear'd with oil;
Or who with gauntlets were us'd to war. Dryd. Fables.

The funeral of some valiant knight
May give this thing its proper light:
View his two gauntlets; these declare
That both his hands were us'd to war.

So to repel the Vandals of the stage,
Our ver'ran bard resumes his tragick rage;
He throws the gauntlet Orway us'd to wield,
And calls for Englishmen to judge the field. Southem.

GA'VOT, n. f. [gavotte, French.] A kind of dance.

The disposition in a fiddle to play tunes in preludes, farabands, jigs and gavots, are real qualities in the instrument.

Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

GAUZE, n. f. A kind of thin transparent silk.

Silken cloaths were used by the ladies; and it seems they were thin, like gauze. Arbutnot on Coin.

Brocades and damasks, and tabbies and gauzes,
Are lately brought over. Swift.

GAWK, n. f. [gag, Saxon.]

1. A cuckow.

2. A foolish fellow. In both senses it is retained in Scotland.

GAWN, n. f. [corrupted for gallow.] A small tub, or lading vessel.

GA'WNTREE, n. f. [Scottish.] A wooden frame on which beer-casks are set when tunned.

GAY, adj. [gay, French.]

1. Airy; cheerful; merry; frolic.

Smooth flow the waves, the zephyrs gently play;
Belinda smil'd, and all the world was gay. Pope.

Belinda smil'd, and all the world was gay.
Ev'n rival wits did Voltaire's fate deplore,
And the gay mourn'd, who never mourn'd before. Pope.

2. Fine; showy.

A virgin that loves to go gay. Bar. vi. 9.

GAY, n. f. [from the adjective.] An ornament; an embellishment.

Morose and untractable spirits look upon precepts in emblem, as they do upon gags and pictures, the fooleries of so many old wives tales. L'Estrange.

GA'YETY, n. f. [gayeté, French, from gay.]

1. Cheerfulness; airiness; merriment.

2. Acts of juvenile pleasure.

To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denham.

3. Finery; show.

Our gayety and our gilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field. Shakespeare's H. V.

GA'YLY, adv. Merrily; cheerfully; showily.

GA'YNESS, n. f. [from gay.] Gayety; finery. Not much in use.

To GAZE, v. n. [ἀναβλέπειν, rather gaze, to see, Sax.]

To look intently and earnestly; to look with eagerness.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem,
Inchas'd with all the honours of the world:

If so, gaze on. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

From some fine cast her model eyes below;
At some her gazing glances roving flew. Fairfax, b. iv.

Gaze not on a maid, that thou fall not by those things that are precious in her. Ecclesiast. ix. 5.

A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind.
Strait toward heav'n my word ring eyes I turn'd,
And gaz'd a while the ample sky. Milton's Paradise Lost.

GAZE, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Intant regard; look of eagerness or wonder; fixed look.

Being light'ned with her beauty's beam,
And thereby fill'd with happy influence,
And lifted up above the world's gaze,
To sing with angels her immortal praise.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
If any air of musick touch their ears,

Spenser.

GEA

You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of musick. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

Not a month
Fore your queen dy'd, she was more worth such gazes
Than what you look on now. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

With secret gaze,
Or open admiration, him behold,
On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd Worlds. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Pindar is a dark writer, wants connexion as to our understandings, fears out of sight, and leaves his readers at a gaze. Lryden's Preface to Ovid.

After having stood at gaze before this gate, he discovered an inscription. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 27.

2. The object gazed on.

I must die
Betray'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out;
Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze;
To grind in brazen fetters, under task,
With my heav'n-gifted strength. Milton's Agonistes.

GAZE, n. f. [from gaze.] He that gazes; one that looks intently with eagerness or admiration.

In her cheeks the vermilion red did shew,
Like roses in a bed of lilies shed;
The which ambrosial odours from them threw,
And gazers sense with double pleasure fed. Fairy Queen.

I'll flay more gazers than the basilisk. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.

Come, basilisk,
And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.

Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers strike;
And, like the sun, they shine on all alike. Pope.

His learned ideas give him a transcendent delight; and yet, at the same time, discover the blemishes which the common gazer never observed. Watts's Logic.

GAZEFUL, adj. [gaze and full.] Looking intently.

The brightness of her beauty clear,
The ravish'd hearts of gazeful men might clear,
To admiration of that heavenly light. Spenser on Beauty.

GAZEHOUND, n. f. [gaze and hound; canis gazeus, Skinner.]

A hound that pursues not by the scent, but by the eye.

See'st thou the gazehound? how with glance severe
From the close herd he marks the destined deer! Tickell.

GAZETTE, n. f. [gazet, a Venetian halfpenny, the price of a news-paper, of which the first was published at Venice.]
A paper of news; a paper of publick intelligence. It is accented indifferently on the first or last syllable.

And sometimes when the loss is small,
And danger great, they challenge all;
Print new additions to their feats,
And emendations in gazettes. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.

An English gentleman, without geography, cannot well understand a gazette. Locke.

One cannot hear a name mentioned in it that does not bring to mind a piece of a gazette. Addison's Guardian.

All, all but truth, falls dead-born from the press;
Like the last gazette, or the last address. Pope.

GAZETTEER, n. f. [from gazette.]

1. A writer of news.

2. It was lately a term of the utmost infamy, being usually applied to wretches who were hired to vindicate the court.

Satire is no more: I feel it die;

No gazetteer more innocent than I. Pope.

GA'ZINGSTOCK, n. f. [gaze and stick.] A person gazed at with scorn or abhorrence.

These things are offences to us, by making us gazingstocks to others, and objects of their scorn and derision. Ray.

GAZON, n. f. [French.] In fortification, pieces of fresh earth covered with grass, cut in form of a wedge, about a foot long and half a foot thick, to line parapets and the traverses of galleries. Harrit.

GEAR, n. f. [gēan, to cloath; gearn, furniture, Saxon.]

1. Furniture; accoutrements; dress; habit; ornaments.

Array thyself in her most gorgeous gear. Fairy Queen.

When he found her bound, stript from her gear,
And vile tormenters ready law in place,
He broke through. Fairfax, b. ii. stan. 27.

When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this magic dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear. Milton.

I fancy every body observes me as I walk the street, and long to be in my old plain gear again. Addison's Guardian.

To see some radiant nymph appear
In all her glitt'ring birthday gear,
You think some goddess from the sky
Descended, ready cut and dry.

2. The traces by which horses or oxen draw.

Apollo's spite Pallas discern'd, and flew to Tydeus' son;
His scourge reach'd, and his horse made fresh; then took her angry run
At king Eumelus, brake his gears. Chapman's Iliads.

The

GEL

The frauds he learn'd in his fanatick years
Made him uneasy in his lawful gears. Dryden.

3. Stuff. Hammer.
If fortune be a woman, she is a good wench for this gear.

Geld later with gelders, as many one do,
And look of a dozen to geld away two. Tuff's Husbandry.
No fow gelder did blow his horn
To geld a cat, but cry'd reform. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.
GE'LDER-ROSE. n. f. [I suppose brought from Guelderland.]
The leaves are like those of the maple-tree: the flowers consist of one leaf, which expands in a circular rosette form, and is divided at the top into five parts: these are collected in form of an umbel, the largest of which grow on the outside, and are barren; but those in the middle are fruitful, producing red berries, in each of which is contained one flat heart-shaped seed.
The species are three. If the soil be moist, this plant affords a very agreeable prospect, both in the season when it is in flower, and also in the Autumn, when the fruit is ripe, which generally grows in large clusters, and is of a beautiful colour. Miller.
The gelder-rose is increased by suckers and cuttings. Mort.
GE'LDING. n. f. [from geld.] Any animal castrated, particularly an horse.
Though naturally there be more males of horses, bulls or rams than females; yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen and weathers, there are fewer. Graunt.
The lord lieutenant may chuse out one of the best horses, and two of the best geldings; for which shall be paid one hundred pounds for the horse, and fifty pounds a-piece for the geldings. Temple.

Let the others be gelt for oxen. Mortimer's Husbandry.
GEM. n. f. [gemma, Latin.]
1. A jewel; a precious stone of whatever kind.
Love his fancy drew;
And so to take the gem Urania fought. Sidney.
Spores of small worth may lie unseen by day;
But night itself does the rich gem betray. Cowley.
The basis of all gems is, when pure, wholly diaphanous, and either crystal or an adamantine matter; but we find the diaphaneity of this matter changed, by means of a fine metallic matter. Woodward.
2. The first bud.
From the joints of thy prolific stem
A swelling knot is raised, call'd a gem;
Whence, in short space, itself the cluster shows. Denham.
Embolden'd out they come,
And swell the gems, and burst the narrow room. Dryden.
The orchard loves to wave
With Winter winds, before the gems exert Their feeble heads. Phillips.
To GEM. v. a. [gemmas, Latin.] To adorn, as with jewels or buds.
To GEM. v. n. [gemmas, Latin.] To put forth the first buds.
Last rose, in dance, the stately trees, and spread

'Till he disburd's, at Saint Colmekill ile,
Ten thousand dollars to our general use. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Nor fail'd they they to express how much they prais'd,
That for the general safety he despis'd
His own. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
6. Not directed to any single object.
If the same thing be peculiarly evil, that general averfion will be turned into a particular hatred against it. Spratt.
7. Extensive, though not universal.
8. Common; usual.
I've been bold,
For that I knew it the most general way. Shakespeare's Timon.
9. General is appended to several offices: as, Attorney General, Solicitor General, Vicar General.
GE'NERAL. n. f.
1. The whole; the totality; the main, without insisting on particulars.
That which makes an action fit to be commanded or forbidden, can be nothing else, in general, but its tendency to promote or hinder the attainment of some end. Norris.
In particulars our knowledge begins, and so spreads itself by degrees to generals. Locke.
I have considered Milton's Paradise Lost in the fable, the characters, the sentiments, and the language; and have shewn that he excels, in general, under each of these heads. Addison.
2. The publick; the interest of the whole. Not in use.
Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business,
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general
Take hold on me; for my particular grief
Ingluts and swallows other sorrows. Shakespeare's Othello.
3. The vulgar. Not in use.
The play, I remember, pleas'd not the million; 'twas cavari to the general: but it was, as I received it, and others, whose judgment in such matters cried in the top of mine, an excellent play. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
4. [General, Fr.] One that has the command over an army.
A general is one that hath power to command an army. Loc.
The generals on the enemy's side are inferior to several that once commanded the French armies. Addison on the War.

This generation shall not pass 'till all these things be fulfilled.
In the fourth generation they shall come hither again. Gen.
A marvellous number were excited to the conquest of Palestine, which with singular virtue they performed, and held that kingdom some few generations. Raleigh's Essays.
5. An age.
By some of the ancients a generation was fixed at an hundred years; by others at an hundred and ten; by others at thirty-three, thirty, thirty-five, and twenty; but it is remarked, that the continuance of generations is so much longer as they come nearer to the more ancient times. Calmet.
Every where throughout all generations and ages of the Christian world, no church ever perceived the word of God to be against it. Hooker.
GENERATIVE. adj. [generativus, French, from genero, Latin.]
1. Having the power of propagation.
He gave to all, that have life, a power generative, thereby to continue their species and kinds. Raleigh's History.
In grains and kernels the greatest part is but the nutriment of that generative particle, so disproportionate unto it. Brown.
2. Prolifick; having the power of production; fruitful.
If there hath been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty upon the earth, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Bentley's Sermons.
GENERATOR. n. f. [from genero, Latin.] The power which begets, causes, or produces.
Imagination assimilates the idea of the generator into the reality in the thing engendered. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
GENERIC. adj. [generique, French, from genero, Latin.]
GENERIC. adj. [That which comprehends the genus, or distinguishes from another genus, but does not distinguish the species.]
The word consumption being applicable to a proper, and improper to a true and bastard consumption, requires a generic description quadrate to both. Harvey on Consumption.
Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit; yet this is but a general or generic difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry; the specific difference of wine, therefore, is its preference from the grape. Watt's Logic.
GENERALLY. adv. [from generic.] With regard to the genus, though not the species.
These have all the essential characters of sea-shells, and show that they are of the very same specific gravity with those to which they are so generically allied. Woodward.

He shows his statue too, where, plac'd on high,
The genet underneath him seems to fly. Dryd. Juven. Sat.
GENETHLIACAL. adj. [γενεθλιακός.] Pertaining to nativities as calculated by astronomers; shewing the configurations of the stars at any birth.
The night immediately before he was fighting the art of those foolish astrologers, and genethliacal ephemerids, that use to pry into the horoscope of natives. Howel's Vatel Forst.
GENETHLIACKS. n. f. [from γενεθλιακός.] The science of calculating nativities, or predicting the future events of life from the stars predominant at the birth.
GENETHLIACK. n. f. [γενεθλιακός.] He who calculates nativities.
The truth of astrological predictions is not to be referred to the constellations: the genethliacks conjecture by the disposition, temper, and complexion of the person. Drummond.
GENEVA. n. f. [A corruption of Geneva, French, a juniper-berry.]
We used to keep a distilled spirituous water of juniper in the shops; but the making of it became the business of the distiller, who sold it under the name of Geneva. At present only a better kind is distilled from the juniper-berry: what is commonly sold is made with no better an ingredient than oil of turpentine, put into the still, with a little common salt, and the coarsest spirit they have, which is drawn off much below proof strength, and is consequently a liquor that one would wonder any people could accustom themselves to drink with pleasure. Hill's Anat. Medica.
GENIAL. adj. [genialis, Latin.]
1. That which contributes to propagation.
Higher of the genial bed by far,
And with mysterious reverence I deem.
Creator Venus, genial pow'r of love,
The bliss of men below and gods above! Dryden's Fables.
2. That gives cheerfulness or supports life.
Nor th' other light of life continue long,
But yields to double darkness night at hand;
So much I feel my genial spirits droop. Milton's Agonists.

GENITALS. n. f. [genitalia, Lat.] Parts belonging to generation.
Ham is conceived to be Jupiter, who was the youngest son, who is said to have cut off the genitals of his father. Brown.
GENITIVE. n. f. [A corruption of Janeton, French, signifying Jane or Janet, having been so called in honour of some lady of that name; and the Scottish dialect calls them Janet apples, which is the same with Janeton: otherwise supposed to be corrupted from Janitine.] An early apple gathered in June.
In July come early pears and plums in fruit, genitives and collins. Bacon, Essay 47.
GENITIVE. adj. [genitivus, Latin.] In grammar, the name of a case, which, among other relations, signifies one begotten, as, the father of a son; or one begetting, as son of a father.
GENIUS. n. f. [Latin; genius, French.]
1. The protecting or ruling power of men, places, or things.
There is none but he
Whose being I do fear: and, under him,
My genius is rebuk'd; as it is said
Antony's was by Caesar. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The genius and the mortal instruments
Are then in council; and the state of man,
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then.
And as I awake, sweet music breathe,
Sent by some spirit to mortals good,
Or th' unseen genius of the wood.
And the tame demon that should guard my throne,
Shrinks at a genius greater than his own.
To your glad genius sacrifice this day;
Let common meats respectfully give way.
There is no little writer of Pindarick who is not mentioned as a prodigious genius.
2. Mental power or faculties.
The state and order does proclaim
The genius of that royal dame.
3. Disposition of nature by which any one is qualified for some peculiar employment.
A happy genius is the gift of nature. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
Your majesty's sagacity, and happy genius for natural history, is a better preparation for enquiries of this kind than all the dead learning of the schools. Burnet's Theory, Preface.
One science only will one genius fit;
So vast is art, so narrow human wit.
The Romans, though they had no great genius for trade, yet were not entirely neglectful of it. Pope on Criticism.
5. Nature;

GEN

5. Nature; disposition.
Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points and tropes he flurs his crimes. Dryd.
Another genius and disposition improper for philosophical contemplations is not so much from the narrowness of their spirit and understanding, as because they will not take time to extend them. Burnet's Theory of the Earth, Preface.
He tames the genius of the stubborn plain. Pope.
GENE. adj. [gent, old French.] Elegant; soft; gentle; polite.
A word now disused.
Vespasian, with great spoil and rage,
Forewasted all: 'till Geniulla gent
Persuaded him to cease. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 10.
She that was noble, wife, as fair and gent,
Cast how the might their harmless lives preserve. Fairfax.
GENTEEL. adj. [gentil, French.]
1. Polite; elegant in behaviour; civil.
He had a genteel manner of binding the chains of this kingdom than most of his predecessors. Swift to Gay.
Their poets have no notion of genteel comedy, and fall into the most filthy double meanings when they have a mind to make their audience merry. Addison's Remarks on Italy.
2. Graceful in mien.
GENEAL. adv. [from genteel.]
1. Elegantly; politely.
Those that would be genteelly learned, need not purchase it at the dear rate of being atheists. Glauco. Sect. Preface.
After a long fatigue of eating and drinking, and babbling, he concludes the great work of dining genteelly. South.
2. Gracefully; handsomely.
GENTEELNESS. n. f. [from genteel.]
1. Elegance; gracefulness; politeness.
He had a genius full of gentleness and spirit, having nothing that was ungraceful in his postures and dresses. Dryd. Dufresnoy.
2. Qualities befitting a man of rank.
GENETIAN. n. f. [gentiana, French; gentiana, Latin.] Felwort or baldmony.
The leaves grow by pairs opposite to each other: the flower consists of one leaf, shaped like a cup, being cut into four, five, or more segments: it is succeeded by a membranous oval shaped fruit, ending in a sharp point, opening lengthwise into two parts, and containing many flat roundish seeds, bordered with a leafy rim. Miller.
The root of the gentian is large and long, of a tolerably firm texture, and remarkably tough: it has a faintish and somewhat disagreeable smell, and an extremely bitter taste. It is brought cheap from Germany. Hill's Anat. Medica.
If it be fitulous, and the orifice small, dilate it with gentian roots.

The late queen's gentlewoman, a knight's daughter,
To be her mistress's mistress! Shakefp. Henry VIII.
Her gentlewomen, like the nereids,
So many mermaids, tended her 't' eyes,
And made her bends adornings. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop.

3. A word of civility or irony.
Now, gentlewoman, you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical down-cast look. Dryden.

GENTLY. adv. [from gentle.]
1. Softly; meekly; tenderly; inoffensively; kindly. Dryden.
My mistress gently chides the fault I made.

The mischiefs that come by inadvertency, or ignorance, are but very gently to be taken notice of. Locke.

2. Softly; without violence.
Fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gently warded, craves
A noble cunning. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
In the same island a sort of great bat, as men lie asleep with their legs naked, will suck their blood at a wound so gently made as not to awake them. Grew's Museum.

GENTRY. n. f. [gentler, gentry, from gentle.]
1. Birth; condition.
You are certainly a gentleman,
Clerk-like experienc'd, which no less adorns
Our gentry than our parents' noble name,
In whose success we are gentle. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

2. Class of people above the vulgar; those between the vulgar and the nobility.
They slaughtered many of the gentry, for whom no sex or age could be accepted for excuse. Sidney.
Let states, that aim at greatness, take heed how their nobility and gentry multiply too fast. Bacon's Orator. Ration.
How cheerfully the hawkers cry
A satire, and the gentry buy. Swift.

2. A term of civility real or ironical.
The many-colour'd gentry there above,
By turns are rul'd by tumult and by love. Prior.

3. Civility; complaisance. Obsolete.

As to extend your time with us a-while. Shakefp. Hamlet.

GENUFLECTION. n. f. [genuflexion, French; genu and flecto, Latin.] The act of bending the knee; adoration expressed by bending the knee.

Here they make use of all the rites of adoration, genuflec-tions, wax-candles, incense, oblations, prayers only excepted.
Stillingfleet's Defence of Disc. on Rom. Lat.

GENUINE. adj. [genuinus, Latin.] Not spurious; not counterfeit; real; natural; true.

Experiments were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones. Boyle.
The belief and remembrance, and love and fear of God, have so great influence to make men religious, that where any of these is, the rest, together with the true and genuine effects of them, are supposed to be. Tillotson's Sermons.

A sudden darkness covers all;
True genuine night: night added to the groves:
The fogs are blown full in the face of heaven. Dryd. Oedip.

GENUINELY. adv. [from genuine.] Without adulteration; without foreign admixtures; naturally.

GEO

There is another agent able to analyze compound bodies less violently, more genuinely, and more universally than the fire. Boyle.

GENUINENESS. n. f. [from genuine.] Freedom from any thing counterfeit; freedom from adulteration; purity; natural state.

It is not essential to the genuineness of colours to be durable. Boyle.

GENUS. n. f. [Latin.] In science, a class of being, comprehending under it many species: as quadruped is a genus comprehending under it almost all terrestrial beasts.

A general idea is called by the schools genus, and it is one common nature agreeing to several other common natures:
so animal is a genus, because it agrees to horse, lion, whale, and butterfly. Watt's Logic.

If minerals are not convertible into another species, though of the same genus, much less can they be furnished reducible into a species of another genus. Harvey on Consumption.

GEOMETRICK. adj. [γῆ and μέτρον; geometrique, French.]
Applied to a planet or orb having the earth for its centre, or the same centre with the earth. Harvi.

GEODESIA. n. f. [γεωδαισία; geodesie, French.] That part of geometry which contains the doctrine or art of measuring surfaces, and finding the contents of all plane figures. Harvi.

GEODETICAL. adj. [from geodesia.] Relating to the art of measuring surfaces; comprehending or showing the art of measuring land.

GEOGRAPHER. n. f. [γῆ and γραφία; geographe, French.]
One who describes the earth according to the position of its different parts.

A greater part of the earth hath ever been peopled than hath been known or described by geographers. Brown.
The bay of Naples is called the Crater by the old geographers. Addison.

From sea to sea, from realm to realm I rove,
And grow a meer geographer by love. Tickell.

GEOGRAPHICAL. adj. [geographique, French, from geography.] Relating to geography; belonging to geography.

GEOGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from geographical.] In a geographical manner; according to the rules of geography.

Minerva lets Ulysses into the knowledge of his country:
she geographically describes it to him. Brown on the Odyssey.

GEOGRAPHY. n. f. [γῆ and γραφία; geographie, Fr.] Geography in a strict sense, signifies the knowledge of the circles of the earth globe, and the situation of the various parts of the earth. When it is taken in a little larger sense, it includes the knowledge of the various customs, habits, and governments of nations. Watt.

Olympus is extolled by the Greeks as attaining unto heaven;
but geography makes slight account hereof, when they discourse of Andes or Teneriff. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.

According to ancient fables the Argonauts sailed up the Danube, and from thence passed into the Adriatick, carrying their ships upon their shoulders: a mark of great ignorance in geography. Arbutnot on Catin.

GEOLOGY. n. f. [γῆ and λόγος] The doctrine of the earth;
the knowledge of the state and nature of the earth.

GEOMANCE. n. f. [γῆ and μανία.] A fortune-teller; a caster of figures; a cheat who pretends to foretell futurity by other means than the astrologer.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, geomancers, and the incantatory impostors, though commonly men of inferior rank, daily delude the vulgar. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

GEOMANCY. n. f. [γῆ and μανία; geomancer, French.]
The art of casting figures; the art of foretelling by figures what shall happen.

According to some persons there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy.
Ayliff's Parergon.

GEOMANTICK. adj. [from geomancy.] Pertaining to the art of casting figures.

Two geomantick figures were display'd
Above his head, a warrior and a maid;
One when direct, and one when retrograde. Dryden.

GEOMETER. n. f. [γεωμέτρης; geometre, French.] One skilled in geometry; a geometrician.

He became one of the chief geometers of his age. Watt.
GEOMETRICAL. adj. [from geometre, from geometry.] Pertaining to geometry.

GEOMETRICAL. adj. [γεωμετρικός; geometrique, French, from geometre.] geometry.

1. Pertaining to geometry.
A geometrical scheme is let in by the eyes, but the demonstration is discerned by reason. Mor's Astrid against Abajin.
This mathematical discipline, by the help of geometrical principles, doth teach to contrive several weights and powers unto motion or rest. Wilkins's Math. Magick.

2. Prescribed or laid down by geometry.
Must men take the measure of God just by the same geometrical proportions that he did, that gather'd the height and big-ness of Hercules by his foot? Stillingfleet.

Does

GER

Does not this wife philosopher assert,
That the vast orb, which casts so fair his beams,
Is such, or not much bigger than he seems?
That the dimensions of his glorious face
Two geometrick feet do scarce surpass? Blackmore's Creation.

3. Disposed according to geometry.
Geometrick Jasper seemeth of affinity with the lapis sanguinalis described by Boetius; but it is certainly one sort of lapis cra-cifermis. Grew's Museum.

GEOMETRICALLY. adv. [from geometrical.] According to the laws of geometry.

'Tis possible geometrically to contrive such an artificial motion as shall be of greater swiftness than the revolutions of the heavens. Ray on the Creation.

All the bones, muscles, and vessels of the body are contrived most geometrically, according to the strictest rules of mechanicks.

GEOMETRICIAN. n. f. [γεωμέτρης.] One skilled in geometry;
a geometer.

Although there be a certain truth therein, geometricians would not receive satisfaction without demonstration thereof.
Erasmus's Vulgar Errors, b. i.

How easily does an expert geometrician, with one glance of his eye, take in a complicated diagram, made up of many lines and circles! Watt's Improvement of the Mind.

To GEOMETRIZE. v. n. [γεωμετρέω.] To act according to the laws of geometry.

We obtained good store of crystals, whose figures were differing enough, though prettily shaped, as if nature had at once affected variety in their figuration, and yet confined herself to geometry.

GEOMETRY. n. f. [γεωμετρία; geometrie, French.] Origini-ally signifies the art of measuring the earth, or any distances or dimensions on or within it: but it is now used for the science of quantity, extension, or magnitude abstractedly considered, without any regard to matter.

Geometry very probably had its first rise in Egypt, where the Nile annually overflowing the country, and covering it with mud, obliged men to distinguish their lands one from another, by the consideration of their figure; and after which, 'tis probable, to be able also to measure the quantity of it, and to know how to plot it, and lay it out again in its just dimensions, figure and proportion: after which, it is likely, a farther contemplation of those draughts and figures helped them to discover many excellent and wonderful properties belonging to them; which speculations were continually improving, and are still to this day. Geometry is usually divided into speculative and practical; the former of which contemplates and treats of the properties of continued quantity abstractedly; and the latter applies these speculations and theorems to use and practice, and to the benefit and advantage of mankind. Harvi.

In the muscles alone there seems to be more geometry than in all the artificial engines in the world. Ray on the Creation.

Him also for my censor I disdain,
Who thinks all science, as all virtue, vain;
Who counts geometry and numbers toys;
And with his foot the sacred dust destroys. Dryd. Pers. Sat.

GEOGNICAL. adj. [γῆ and γένος; geognique, French.] Relating to agriculture; relating to the cultivation of the ground.

Such expressions are frequent in authors geognical, or such as have treated de re rustica. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi.

GEOGNICKS. n. f. [γῆ and γένος.] The science of cultivating the ground; the doctrine of agriculture.

GEORGE. n. f. [Georgius, Latin.]

1. A figure of St. George on horseback worn by the knights of the garter.

Look on my George, I am a gentleman;
Rate me at what thou wilt. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

2. A brown loaf. Of this sense I know not the original.
Cubb'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid,
On a brown George, with lousy twobbers, fed. Dryd. Pers.

GEORICK. n. f. [γεωργικός; georgique, Fr.] Some part of the science of husbandry put into a pleasing dress, and set off with all the beauties and embellishments of poetry. Addison.

GEORICK. adj. Relating to the doctrine of agriculture.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have

as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind so easily known, but the gifts of God, according to these degrees and times, which he in his secret wisdom seeth meet, are so diversely bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive, what all stand in need of, it seldom lieth hid. 1st Cor. b. v.

The graces of the spirit are much more precious than worldly benefits, and our ghostly evils of greater importance than any harm which the body teeleth. Hooker, b. v. f. 35.
To deny me the ghostly comfort of my chaplains, seems a greater barbarity than is ever used by Christians. King Charles.

2. Having a character from religion; spiritual.
Hence will I to my ghostly friar's clove cell,
His help to crave, and my dear hap to tell. Sh. Ro. and Jul.

GL'AMORUX. n. f. [jambes, French.] Legs, or armour for legs; greaves.

The mortal steel dispiteously entail'd,
Deep in their flesh, quite through the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adown their gamboux falls. F. 2.
GL'ANT. n. f. [geant, French; gigas, Latin.] A man of size above the ordinary rate of men; a man unnaturally large. It is observable, that the idea of a giant is always associated with pride, brutality, and wickedness.

Now does he feel his axle
Haug loose about him, like a giant's robe
Upon a dwarfish thief. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without Good-morrow to the sun. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

Woman's gentle brain
Could not drop forth such giant rude invention;
Such Ethiop words. Shaksp. As you like it.
Fierce faces threat'ning wars,
Giants of mighty bone, and bold emprise! Milt. Pa. Lst.

Those giants, those mighty men, and men of renown, far exceeded the proportion, nature, and strength of those giants remembered by Moses of his own time. Ralegh's History.
The giant brothers, in their camp, have found
I was not forc'd with ease to quit my ground. Dryden's Æn.

By weary steps and slow
The groping giant with a trunk of pine Explor'd his way. Addis.
Neptune, by pray'r repentant, rarely won,
Afflicts the chief 't' avenge his giant son,
Great Polyphemus, of more than mortal might. Pope.

GL'ANTESS. n. f. [from giant.] A giant; a woman of unnatural bulk and height.

GL'ANTLIKE. adj. [from giant and like.] Gigantick; vast; GL'ANTLY. } bulky.
Single courage, has often, without romance, overcome giantly difficulties. Decay of Piety.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, which they are deplorably strangers to, and those unanswerable doubts and difficulties, which, over their cups, they pretend to have against Christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deify his money, the proud man not to adore himself, and I dare undertake that all their giantlike objections against the Christian religion shall presently vanish and quit the field. South's Sermon.

GL'ANTSHIP. n. f. [from giant.] Quality or character of a giant.
His giantship is gone somewhat crest-fall'n,
Stalking with less unconscionable strides,
And lower looks. Milton's Aemist.

GIBBER. n. f. Any old worn-out animal.
For who that's but a queen, fair, sober, wife,
Would from a paddock, from a bat, a gibbe,
Such dear concernings hide? Shaksp. Hamlet.

TO GIBBER. v. n. [from jabber.] To speak inarticulately.
The sheeted dead
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets. Shaksp. Hamlet.

GIBBERISH. n. f. [Derived by Skinner from gaber, French, to cheat; by others conjectured to be formed by corruption from jabber. But as it was anciently written gebrish, it is probably derived from the chymical cant, and originally implied the jargon of Geber and his tribe.] Cant; the private language of rogues and gipfls; words without meaning.

Some, if they happen to hear an old word, albeit very natural and significant, cry out straitways that we speak no English, but gibberish.
Some of both sexes writing down a number of letters, just as it came into their heads; upon reading this gibberish, that which the men had wrote founded like High Dutch, and the other by the women like Italian. Swift.

But the dean, if this secret should come to his ears,
Will never have done with his giber and his jeers. Swift.
GIBBER. n. f. [from gibe.] A jeerer; one who turns others to ridicule by contemptuous hints; a scoffer; a taunter.

These imposts are laid on all butcher's meat, while, at the same time, the fowl and gibbier are tax free. Addison on Italy.

GIBBO'SITY. n. f. [gibbosity, Fr. from gibbus.] Convexity; prominence; protuberance.
When two ships, sailing contrary ways, lose the sight one of another, what should take away the sight of ships from each other, but the gibbosity of the interjacent water? Ray.

GIBBOUS. adj. [gibbus, Latin; gibbeus, Fr.]
1. Convex; protuberant; swelling into inequalities.
The bones will rise, and make a gibbous member. Wifeman.
A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back. Dryden.

The sea, by this access and recess, shuffling the empty shells, wears them away, reducing those that are concave and gibbous to a flat. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Crookbacked.
I shall demand how the camels of Baetria came to have two bunches in their back, whereas the camels of Arabia, in all relations, have but one? How oxen, in some countries, began and continue gibbous, or hunch-backed? Erasmus.

GIBBOUSNESS. n. f. [from gibbus.] Convexity; prominence.
To make the convexity of the earth discernible, suppose a man lifted in the air, that he may have a spacious horizon; but then, because of the distance, the convexity and gibbousness would vanish away, and he would only see a great circular flat. Bentley's Sermons.

GIBCAT. n. f. [gib and cat.] An old worn-out cat.
I am as melancholy as a gibcat, or a lugg'd bear. Shaksp.
TO GIBBE. v. n. [gaber, old French, to sneer, to ridicule.] To sneer; to join censoriousness with contempt.

They seem to imagine that we have erected of late a frame of some new religion, the furniture whereof we should not have borrowed from our enemies, left they should afterwards laugh and gibe at our party. Hooker, b. iv. f. 9.

When he saw her toy, and gibe, and geer,
And pass the bounds of modest merry-make,
Her dalliance he despis'd. Perry Queen, b. ii. cant. 6.
Why that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools. Shaksp. As you like it.

Thus with talents well endu'd
To be furious and rude,
When you perty raise your snout,
Fleece and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

TO GIBBE. v. a. To reproach by contemptuous hints; to flout; to scoff; to ridicule; to treat with scorn; to sneer; to taunt.
When rioting in Alexandria: you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my mislive out of audience. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

Draw the beasts as I describe them,
From their features, while I gibe them. Swift.
GIBBE. n. f. [from the verb.] Sneer; hint of contempt by word or look; scoff; ad or expression of scorn; taunt.
Mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorns
That dwell in ev'ry region of his face. Shaksp. Othello.

The rich have still a gibe in store.
And will be monstrous witty on the poor. Dryden's Jacon.
If they would hate from the bottom of their hearts, their aversion would be too strong for little gibes every moment. Spektator, No. 300.

But the dean, if this secret should come to his ears,
Will never have done with his giber and his jeers. Swift.
GIBBER. n. f. [from gibe.] A jeerer; one who turns others to ridicule by contemptuous hints; a scoffer; a taunter.
You are well understood to be a more perfect giber of the tables, than a necessary bencher of the capitol. Shaksp. Cor.

GID

Come, Sempronias, leave him;
He is a giber, and our present business
Is of more serious consequence. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.
GIBINGLY. adv. [from gibe.] Scornfully; contemptuously.
His present portance,
Gibingly and ungravelly he did fashion
After th' inveterate hate he bears to you. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

GIBBETS. n. f. [According to Mishew from gibbet, gibbet; according to Junius more probably from gibet, game, Fr.] The parts of a goose which are cut off before it is roasted.
'Tis holiday; provide me better cheer:
'Tis holiday; and shall be round the year:
Shall I my household gods and genius cheat,
To make him rich who grudges me my meat?
That he may loll at ease, and pamper'd high,
When I am laid, may feed on gibbet pie. Dryden's Pers.

GIDDILY. adv. [from giddy.]
1. With the head seeming to turn round.

- This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin. Pope, Dial. 1.
- These shall each alehouse, these each gillhouse mourn,
And answering ginhops souter sighs return. Pope's Dunciad.
- GINGER. n. f. [zingiber, Latin; gingero, Italian.]
- The flower consists of five leaves, which are shaped somewhat like those of the iris: these are produced in an head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary afterwards becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain their seeds. Miller.
- The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromatick, and of a very agreeable smell. The indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves, cut small in their salads, and make an excellent sweetmeat of them. Ginger is an excellent carminative and stomachick. Hall's Mat. Medica.
- Or wafting ginger round the streets to go,
And visit alehouse where ye first did grow. Pope's Dunciad.
- GINGERBREAD. n. f. [ginger and bread.] A kind of fasticious sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or bifecuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some other aromatick seeds. It is sometimes gilt.
- And I had but one penny in the world, thou should'st have it to buy gingerbread. Shakespeare's Love's Labour's Lost.
- Her curtains there and gooseberries were spread,
With the enticing gold of gingerbread. King's Cookery.
- 'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks froth, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames. Swift.
- GINGERLY. adv. [I know not whence derived.] Cautiously, nicely.
- What is't that you Took up to gingerly? Shakespeare's Two Gent. of Verona.
- GINGERNES. n. f. Niceness; tenderness. Diel.
- GINGIVAL. adj. [gingiva, Latin.] Belonging to the gums.
- Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occlude appulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of puerility. Holder's Elements of Speech.
- TO GINGLE. v. n.
1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.
- The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
And in thy pocket ginging halfpence found. Gay's Trivia.
- Once, we confess, beneath the parrot's cluck,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,
And ginging down the backstairs, told the crew,
Old Cato is as great a rogue as you. Pope's Epistles.
2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadences.
- TO GINGLE. v. a. To shake so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.

other end is joined to the incus by a double or ginglymoid joint. Holder's Elements of Speech.
- GINGLYMUS. n. f. [ginglymus, French.] A mutual indenting of two bones into each other's cavity, of which the elbow is an instance. Wifeman.
- GINNET. n. f. [ginneta, Latin.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but I believe, erroneously, a Spanish ginet, improperly written for ginet.
- GINSENG. n. f. [I suppose Chinese.] A root brought lately into Europe. It never grows to any great size, and is of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent.
It is of a very agreeable and aromatick smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acrid and aromatick, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China; and there is of it in the same latitudes in America. The Chinese value this root so highly, that it sells with them for three times its weight in silver. The Asiatics in general think the ginseng almost an universal medicine. The virtues most generally believed to be in it are those of a restorative, and a cordial.
The European physicians esteem it a good medicine in convulsions, vertiges, and all nervous complaints; and recommend it as one of the best restoratives known. Hill.
- TO GIP. v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.
- GIPSY. n. f. [Corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe they declared, and perhaps truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations.]
1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or physiognomy.

 GIRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing in motion. See GYRE.
 GIRL. n. f. [About the etymology of this word there is much question: Meric Casaubon, as is his custom, derives it from gyr, of the same signification; Minfrew from garvula, Latin, a prattler, or girella, Italian, a weathercock; Junius thinks that it comes from heridole, Welsh, from which, says he, herlet is very easily deduced. Skinner imagines that the Saxons, who used ceopl for a man, might likewise have ceopla for a woman, though no such word is now found. Dr. Hicli derives it most probably from the Islandick karlinna, a woman.] A young woman, or female child.
 In those unfeign'd days was my wife a girl. Shakespeare.

That have beheld me give away myself
To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife. Shakespeare
I know not how they sold themselves; but thou, like a kind fellow, gav'st thyself away gratis, and I thank thee for thee. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
Love gives away all things, that to be may advance the interest of the beloved person. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
But we who give our native rights away,
And our enslav'd posterity betray,
Are now reduc'd to beg an alms, and go
On holidays to see a puppet-show. Dryden's Juvenal's Sat.
Alas, said I, man was made in vain! How is he given away to misery and mortality! Addison's Spectator, No. 159.
Theodosius arrived at a religious house in the city, where Constantia resided, and made himself one of the order, with a private vow never to inquire after Constantia, whom he looked upon as given away to his rival, upon the day on which their marriage was to have been solemnized. Addison's Spectator.
Whatever we employ in charitable uses, during our lives, is given away from ourselves: what we bequeath at our death, is given from others only, as our nearest relations. Atterbury.
24. To GIVE back. To return; to restore.
Till their vices perhaps give back all those advantages which their victories procured. Atterbury's Sermons.
25. To GIVE forth. To publish; to tell.
Soon after it was given forth, and believed by many, that the king was dead.
26. To GIVE the hand. To yield pre-eminence, as being subordinate or inferior.
Lessons being free from some inconveniences, whereunto sermons are more subject, they may in this respect no less take than in others they must give the hand, which betokeneth pre-eminence. Hosker.
27. To GIVE over. To leave; to quit; to cease.
Let novelty therefore in this give over endless contradictions, and let ancient customs prevail. Hosker.

Lacks on Education.
7. To GIVE over. To cease; to act no more.
If they will speak to the purpose, they must give over, and stand upon such particulars only as they can shew we have either added or abrogated, otherwise than we ought, in the matter of church polity. Hooker, b. iii.
Neither hath Christ, thro' union of both natures, incurred the damage of either; left, by being born a man, we should think he hath given over to be God, or that because he continued God, therefore he cannot be man also. Hooker, b. v.
Give not o'er to: to him again; intreat him,
Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown;
You are too cold. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
The state of human actions is so variable, that to try things oft, and never to give over, doth wonders. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Demetrius, king of Macedon, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and still answered he had no leisure; whereupon the woman said aloud, Why then give over to be king.

Our givers their own gifts. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.
By thee how fairly is the giver now
Repaid? But gratitude in thee is lost
Long since. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. iv.
I have not liv'd since first I heard the news;
The gift the guilty giver doth accuse. Dryden's Aurengzeib.
Both gifts destructive to the givers prove;
Alike both lovers fall by those they love. Pope.
GIZZARD. n. f. [gizer, French; gigeria, Latin.] It is sometimes called gizzard.
1. The strong muscular stomach of a fowl.
Fowls have two ventricles, and pick up stones to convey them into their second ventricle, the gizzard. More.
In birds there is no mastication in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop, a kind of antestomach, where it is moistened by some proper juice from the glands diffusing in there, and thence transferred into the gizzard, or muscular stomach. Rey.
Flurrying there they nestle near the throne,
And lodge in habitations not their own;
By their high crops and corn gizzards known. Dryden.
2. It is proverbially used for apprehension or conception of mind;
as, he frets his gizzard, he harrasses his imagination.
But that which does them greatest harm,
Their spiritual gizzards are too warm;
Which puts the overheated fets
In fevers full. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 11.
Satisfaction and restitution lie so curiously hard upon the gizzards of our publicans, that the blood in their veins is not half so dear to them as the treasure they have in their coffers. L'Estrange.

GLADE. n. f. [from glopan, to be hot, or to shine; whence the Danish glad, and the obsolete English gleed, a red hot coal.] A lawn or opening in a wood. Lucas. It is taken for an avenue through a wood, whether open or shaded, and has therefore epithets of opposite meaning.
So flam'd his eyes with rage and rancorous ire;
Those glaring lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 11.

To where they spy'd, how in a gloomy glade
The lion sleeping lay in secret shade. Hubbard's Tale.
O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

When any, favour'd of high Jove,
Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
Swift as a sparkle of a glancing star
I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convoy. Milton.
For noonday's heat are cloister arbours made,
And for fresh ev'ning air the op'ner glade. Dryd. Innocence.

Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades,
By the heroes' armsel shades,
Glitt'ring through the gloomy glades;
By the youths that dy'd for love,
Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
Restore, restore Eurydice to life!

Oh, take the husband, or restore the wife! Pope's St. Cecil.

GLAND. n. f. [glans, Latin; gland, French.]
All the glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands, and testes. A conglomerate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.
I observed the abscess to have begun deep in the body of the glands. Wifeman's Surgery.

The glands, which o'er the body spread,
Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
Involv'd and twist'd with th' arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obstruct. Blackm. Creation.

GLANDERS. n. f. [from gland.] In a horse, is the running of corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green or black. Farrier's Dict.

There are no testicles, or parts official unto generation, but glandulous substances, that hold the nature of emunctories. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 17.

Such constitutions must be subject to glandulous tumours and ruptures of the lymphatic, and all the diseases thereon dependant. Arbutnot on Aliments.

To GLARE. v. n. [glaren, Dutch.]
1. To shine so as to dazzle the eyes.
After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or, contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the sight confused. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
His glaring eyes with anger's venom swell,
And like the brand of foul Alecto flame. Fairfax, b. ii.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatic wit, and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately without ambition. Dryden.

The court of Cacus stands reveal'd to light;
The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryden's Aen.

Alas, thy dazzled eye
Beholds this man in a false glaring light,
Which conquest and success have thrown upon him. Addis.

2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.
Avaunt, and quit my light! let the earth hide thee!
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Look, how pale he glares!
His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand;
But when they met they made a fury land,
And glar'd, like angry lions, as they pass'd,
And with'd that ev'ry look might be their last. Dryd. Fables.

3. To shine ostentatiously, or with too much labour'd lustre.
The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest, or most correct. Felton on the Classics.

To GLARE. v. a. To shoot such splendour as the eye cannot bear.
One spirit in them rul'd, and every eye
Glaz'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire
Among th' accurs'd, that wither'd all their strength. Milton.

GLARE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eye.
The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryd. Fab.
I have griev'd to see a person of quality gliding by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a grove of flambeaux. Addison's Guardian.

Here in a grotto, shelter'd close from air,
And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,
She sighs for ever. Pope's Rock of the Lock.

2. A fierce piercing look.
About them round,
A lion now he stalks with fiery glare. Milt. Parad. Lost.

GLAREOUS. adj. [glareux, Fr. glareus, Latin, from glare.] Consisting of viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.
GLARING. adj. Applied to any thing very shocking: as, a glaring crime.

GLASS. n. f. [glaz, Saxon; glas, Dutch, as Pezzon imagines from glaz, British, green. In Erse it is called klann, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency. Peasch on Drawing.

1. An artificial substance made by fusing fixed salts and flint or sand together, with a vehement fire.
The word glass cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glaz, from the verb glazen, which signifies amongst them to shine; or perhaps from glacies in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it resembles.

2. A transparent substance, which is also of so close a texture that the subtlest chymical spirits cannot pervade it. Boyle.
Show'rs of granadoes rain, by sudden burst

GLA

Disploding murder'ous bowels, fragments of steel
And stones, and glass and nitrous grain adust. Phillips.

2. A glass vessel of any kind.
I'll see no more;
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass
Which shews me many more. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. A looking-glass; a mirror.
He was the mark and glass, copy and book,
That fashion'd others. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
He spreads his subtle nets from light,
With twinkling glasses, to betray
The larks that in the meshes light. Dryden's Horace.

4. A Flow Glass. A glass used in measuring time by the flux of sand.
Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, she would not live
The running of one glass. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

5. A cup of glass used to drink in.
To this last costly treaty,
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
Did break i' th' rinsing. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

When thy heart
Dilates with fervent joys, and eager soul
Prompts to pursue the sparkling glass, besure
'Tis time to shun it. Phillips.

6. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glass; a draught.
While a man thinks one glass more will not make him drunk, that one glass hath disabled him from well discerning his present condition. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

The first glass may pass for health, the second for good-humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

7. A perspective glass.
Like those who have surveyed the moon by glasses, I can only tell of a new and shining world above us; but not relate the riches and glories of the place. Dryden.

GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glass.
Get thee glass eyes;
And, like a scurvy politician, seem
To see the things thou do'st not. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GLASS. n. f. [from glaz, Saxon; glas, Dutch, as Pezzon imagines from glaz, British, green. In Erse it is called klann, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency. Peasch on Drawing.

1. To see as in a glass; to represent as in a glass or mirror.
Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,
And in thy case do glass mine own debility. Sidney, b. ii.

2. To case in glass.
Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye,
As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;
Who tending their own worth, from whence they were glaz'd,
Did point out to buy them, along as you pass. Shakespeare.

3. To cover with glass; to glaze.
I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps glazed over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.

GLASSFURNACE. n. f. [glaz and furnace.] A furnace in which glass is made by liquefaction.
If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glassfurnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. Locke.

GLASSGazing. adj. [glaz and gazing.] Finical; often contemplating himself in a mirror.
A whorl, glassgazing, superfluous, finical rogue. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GLASSGRINDER. n. f. [glaz and grinder.] One whose trade is to polish and grind glass.
The glassgrinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.

GLASSHOUSE. n. f. [glaz and house.] A house where glass is manufactured.
I remember to have met with an old Roman Mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glasshouse. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

GLASSMAN. n. f. [glaz and man.] One who sells glass.
The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the glassman. Swift.

GLASSMETAL. n. f. [glaz and metal.] Glass in fusion.
Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GLASSWORK. n. f. [glaz and work.] Manufacture of glass.
The crystalline Venice glass is a mixture, in equal portions, of stones brought from Pavia, and the ashes of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; and is by the Egyptians used first for such, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glasswork. Bacon's Natural History.

GLASSWORK

GLE

GLASSWORT. n. f. [Jaliscoria, or saltwort.]
It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the lamina, or chives, and the embryos grow on the extreme part of the leaves: these embryos afterward become pods or bladders, which for the most part contain one seed. The species are two. These plants grow on the sea-coasts in many parts of Europe, and upon the shores in several places of England which are washed every tide with the salt water. The inhabitants, near the sea-coast where these plants grow, cut them up toward the latter end of Summer, when they are fully grown; and, after having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp, and are promiscuously gathered for use. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, much used by the chymists. Miller.
For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali or glasswort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
GLASSY. adj. [from glass.]
1. Made of glass; vitreous.
In the valley near mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which, of all others, hath most affinity with glass; inasmuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.
2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness or lustre, or brittleness.
Man! proud man!
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd:
His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heav'n,
As makes the angels weep. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.
There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shews his hoary leaves in the glassy stream. Shak. Ham.
The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing-dust. Brown.
Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred
The hoary frosts that fall on Winter's head? Sandy.
A hundred weep,
With stretching oars, the glassy deep. Dryden's Æn.
GLASTONBURY Thorn. n. f. A species of MEDLAR, whitchce.
This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in Winter, and flowers again in the Spring, and in no other respect differs from the common hawthorn. Miller.
GLAUOMO. n. f. [γλαυκωμα; gleauomo, French.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a greyish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. Quincy.
The gleauomo is no other disease than the cataract. Sharp.
GLAIVE. n. f. [glaiue, French; glaiue, a hook, Welsh. Glaiue is Eric for a broad sword.] A broad sword; a falchion.
Two hundred Greeks came next in fight well try'd,
Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,
But each a glaive had pendant by his side. Fairfax, l. i.
When zeal, with aged clubs and glaives,
Gave chace to rockets and white staves. Hudibras, p. iii.
TO GLAVER. v. n. [glave, Welsh, flattery; glavan, Saxon, to flatter. It is still retained in Scotland.] To flatter; to wheedle. A low word.
Kingdoms have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glaving council is as dangerous on the one hand as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician is on the other. LeStrange's Fables.
TO GLAZE. v. a. [To glaze, only accidentally varied.]
1. To furnish with windows of glass.
Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hanged, and glazed with crystalline glass. Bacon's Essays.
2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware; [from the French glâze, argille.]
3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.
Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects. Shaksp. R. II.
The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it found reason that carries the stroke home. Grev's Cofin. Sac. b. ii. c. 6.
White, with other strong colours, with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
GLAZIER. n. f. [corrupted from glazier, or glazier, of glass.] One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.
Into rabbits the several panes of glasswork are set, and fastened by the glazier. Mason's Mech. Exerc.
The dextrous glazier strong returns the bound,
And ginsling fathoms on the penthouse found. Gay's Trivia.
GLEAD. n. f. A buzzard hawk; a kite. It retains that name in Scotland.
GLEAM. n. f. [geloma, Saxon.] Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.
Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen
Upon seven hills to spread his gladome gleam;
And conquerors bedecked with his green,
Along the banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenser.

GLE

At last a gleam
Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. iii.
As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. iv.
Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast. Dryd. Aureng.
We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,
And covers all the field with gleams of fire. Addison's Cato.
In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green. Pope.
Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
Around the dreary coast,
Fires that glow,
Shrieks of woe. Pope's St. Cecilia.
TO GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To shine with sudden cheering day.
Observant of approaching day,
The meek-eyed morn appears, another of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled East. Thomson's Summer.
Ye gleamings of departed peace
Shine out your last. Thomson's Spring.
2. To shine.
On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vista's through the trees. Thomson.
GLEAMY. adj. [from gleam.] Flashing; darting sudden conceptions of light.
In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warriour bends his way. Pope.
TO GLEAN. v. a. [gleaner, French, as Skinner thinks, from granum.]
1. To gather what the gatherers of the harvest leave behind.
She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers. Ruth ii.
Cheap conquest for his following friends remain'd;
He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd. Dryden.
She went, by hard necessity compell'd,
To glean Palemon's fields. Thomson's Autumn.
2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.
Gather
So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus. Shaksp. Hamlet.
That goodness
Of gleaming all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, card'nal, by extortion. Shak. H. VIII.
They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men. Judge, xx. 45.
But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his resplendent arms flash'd through the shady plain,
Fled from his well-known face with wonted fear;
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear Drove headlong to their ships, and gleam'd the routed rear. Dryden's Æn. l. vi.
In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.
GLEAN. n. f. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.
Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
The gleans of yellow thyme distend his thighs:
He spoils the saffron. Dryden's Virg. Georg. b. iv.
GLEANER. n. f. [from glean.]
1. One who gathers after the reapers.
For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,
Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field. Thomson's Autumn.
2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.
An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arrogant statesman, and as much superior to him, as a man conversant about the court is to a shopkeeper. Locke.
GLEANNING. n. f. [from glean.] The act of gleanings, or thing gleaned.
There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaming of grapes when the vintage is done. Bible.
The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest. Atterbury's Sermon.
GLEBE. n. f. [gleba, Latin.]
1. Turf; soil; ground.
Fertile of corn the glebe, of oil and wine,
With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills. Milton.
Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

Sleeping

GLI

Sleeping vegetables lie,
Till the glad fummons of a genial ray
Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to day. Gay's l.
2. The land possessed as part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.
The ordinary living or revenue of a personage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tithes, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people. Spelman.
A tithes done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court. Ashe's Par. reg.
Many parishes have not an inch of glebe. Swift.
GLEBOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy. Diet.
GLEBY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.
Pernicious flattery! thy malignant seeds
In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand
Sally diffus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,
And choke the hopes and harvest of the year. Prior.
GLEDE. n. f. [gleaghe, Saxon.] A kite.
Ye shall not eat the glede, the kite, and the vulture. Deut.
GLEE. n. f. [glege, Saxon.] Joy; merriment; gaiety. It anciently signified music played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.
She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,
Whom all the people follow with great glee. Fairy Queen.
Many wayfarers make themselves glee, by putting the inhabitants in mind of their privilege; who again foretell not to baigne them with perfume. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.
And his sportive limbs,
This way and that convolv'd, in friskful glee
Their frolics play. Thomson's Spring.
Is Blouzelinda dead? Farewell my glee!
No happiness is now reserv'd for me. Gay's Pastorals.
GLEED. n. f. [from gloyan, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word.
GLEEFUL. adj. [gle and ful.] Gay; merry; cheerful.
My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast? Shakspere.
GLEEK. n. f. [glege, Saxon.] Mutek; or musician.
What will you give us?—No money, but the glee: I will give you the minstrel. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.
TO GLEEK. v. a. [glegan, in Saxon, is a mimic or a droll.] 1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon.
I can gleek upon occasion. Shaksp. Mid. Night's Dream.
I have seen you gleeking or galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakspere's Henry V.
2. In Scotland it is still retained, and signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimicry or drollery.
TO GLEEN. v. n. To shine with heat or polish. I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glow or with gleam.
Those who labour
The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythes,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleening armour, Acknowledge Vulcan's aid. Prior.
GLEET. n. f. [It is written by Skinner glitt, and derived from glean, Saxon, to run fastly.] A fanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a sore.
There then lay a hard dry eschar, without either matter or gleet. Wise's Surgery.
TO GLEET. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To drip or ooze with a thin fanious liquor.
His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops. Wise's Surgery.
2. To run slowly.
Vapours may be raised by the sun in such quantities as are sufficient to make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, till they hit against the sides of the more mountainous places of the globe, and by this condensation are condensed, and so gleet down the rocky caverns of these mountains, whose inner parts being hollow and stony, afford them a basin. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
GLEETRY. adj. [from gleet.] Ichory; thinly fanious.
If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gleetry, you may suspect it corrupting. Wise's Surgery.
GLENN. n. f. [gleann, Irish.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.
From me his madding mind is flart,
And woos the widow's daughter of the glen. Spenser.
GLEW. n. f. [gluten, Latin.] A viscous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly. See GLUE.
GLIB. adj. [from glis.] Slippery.
1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.
Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them: the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Hablakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope, compactly twisted together, with a noose that slip'd as glib as a birdcatcher's gin. Bathurst.
2. Smooth; voluble.
I want that glib and oily art
To speak and purple not, since what I well intend, I'll do't before I speak. Shakspere's King Lear.
There was never so much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English. Locke.
Now Curl his shop from rubbish drains;
Three genuine tomes of Swift's remains:
And then, to make them pass the glibber, Revis'd by Tibbald, Moore, and Cibber. Swift.
Be sure he's a fine spoken man;
Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran. Swift.
GLIB. n. f.
They have another custom from the Scythians, the wearing of mantles and long glib; which is a thick curled bush of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disguising them. Spenser on Ireland.
TO GLIB. v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.
I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations; they are coheirs,
And I had rather glib myself than they Should not produce fair issue. Shakspere's Winter's Tale.
GLIBLY. adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.
Many who would flatter at an oath, whose stomachs as well as consciences recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction. Government of the Tongue.
GLIBNESS. n. f. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.
A polish'd ice-like glibness doth ensord
The rock. Chapman's Odyssey.
The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving. Government of the Tongue.
TO GLIDE. v. n. [glean, Saxon; gliden, Dutch.]
1. To flow gently and silently.
By East, among the dusty vallies, glide
The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood. Fairfax, b. iii.
Broke by the jutting land on either side,
In double streams the winy waters glide. Dryden's Æn.
Just before the confines of the wood,
The gliding Lethe leads her silent flood. Dryden's Æn.
Where stray the Muses, in what lawn or grove?
In those fair fields where sacred Isis glides,
Or else where Cam his winding vales divides. Pope.
2. To pass gently and without tumult.
Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate
The mystick wonders of your silent state. Dryden's Æn.
3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.
If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I Glide thither in a day? Shakspere's Cymbeline.
Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales,
Glide under the green wave. Milton.
He trembl'd every limb, and felt a smart
As if cold steel had glided through his heart. Dryd. Fables.
All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only glide before the eye and disappear. Dryden.
GLIDE. n. f. [from the verb.] Laple; act or manner of passing smoothly.
About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly
Seeing Orlando it unlik'd itself,
And with indent'd glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shakspere's As you like it.
GLIDER. n. f. [from glide.] One that glides.
The glance into my heart did glide;
Hey ho the glider!
Therewith my soul was sharply gride,
Such wounds soon waxen wider. Spenser's Pastoral.
GLIKE. n. f. [glike, Saxon. See GLEEK.] A liver; a scoff; a flout. Not now in use.
Now where's the bastard's braves, and Charles his glikes? Shakspere's Henry VI. p. i.
TO GLIMMER. v. n. [glimmer, Danish, to shine; glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]
1. To shine faintly.
The West yet glimmers with some streaks of day. Shaksp.
The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out,
—And on my side it is so well apparell'd,
So clear, so shining, and so evident,
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye. Shakspere.
Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
He met her. Milton.
Sec't

GLI

See't thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The seat of desolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of these livid flames
Casts pale and dreadful? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

The sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of heav'n
Shoots far into the bosom of dim night
A glimmering dawn. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Through these sad shades this chaos in my soul,
Some seeds of light at length began to roll;
The rising motion of an infant ray
Shot glimmering through the cloud, and promis'd day. Prior.

On by the winds, extinct the signal lies;
Or smother'd in the glimmering socket dies. Gay's Trivia.

When rosy morning glimmer'd o'er the dales,
He drove to pasture all the lusty males. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.
On the way the baggage post-boy, who had been at court, got a glimmering who they were. Wotton.

The Pagan priesthood was always in the druids; and there was a perceivable glimmering of the Jewish rites in it, though much corrupted. Swift.

GLIMMER, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Faint splendour; weak light.
2. A kind of foil.

The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of fables to give those bodies the name of mica and glimmer. Woodward on Fossils.

Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastic: talc, catiliver, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward.

GLIMMER, n. f. [glimmer, Dutch, to glow.]
1. A weak faint light.
Such vast room in nature,
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far Down to this habitable, which returns Light back to them. Milt. Par. Lost.

Thousands of things, which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or, which our shortighted reason having got some faint glimpse of, we, in the dark, grope after. Locke.

2. A quick flashing light.
Light as the lightning glimpse they ran? Milton's P. Lost.

My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires;
My manhood, long mistled by wand'ring fires,
Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,
My pride struck out new spangles of her own. Dryden.

3. Transitory lustre.
If I, celestial fire, in aught
Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my issue give;
Grac'd for the little time he has to live. Dryd. Fables.

4. Short fleeting enjoyment.
If, while this weary'd flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
If haply be thy will that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great fire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.

5. A short transitory view.
O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet
Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern Ithuriel, and Zephon, through the shade. Milt. Par. Lost.

Some he punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might from thence have a taste or glimpse of his present justice.
Hakewill on Providence.

A man, used to such sort of reflections, sees as much at one glimpse as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd. Dryden's Virgil.

6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.
There is no man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of.
Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

To GLISTEN, v. n. [glitten, German.] To shine; to sparkle with light.
The bleating kind
Eye the bleak heaven, and next the glistering earth,
With looks of dumb despair. Thomson's Winter.

The ladies eyes glistered with pleasure. Richardson's Pamela.

To GLISTER, v. n. [glitter, German; glisteren, Dutch.] To shine; to be bright.
The wars flame most in Summer, and the helmets glister brightest in the fairest sunshine. Spenser on Ireland.

How he glisters
Through my dark ruff! And how his piety Does my deeds make the blacker! Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble lives in content,

GLO

Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

The golden sun
Gallops the zodiac in his glistering coach. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

All that glisters is not gold. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

You were more the eye and talk
Of the court to day, than all Else that glister'd in Whitehall. Pen. Johnson's Underworld.

When the sun shone upon the shields of gold and brass, the mountains glistered therewith, and shined like lamps of fire. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.

GLISTER, n. f. [Properly written glister, from glisteren.] See GLISTER.

Now enter: Bush with new state airs,
His lordship's premier minister;
And who, in all profound affairs,
Is held as useful as his glister. Swift.

Choler is the natural glister, or one excretion whereby nature excludeth another; which, descending daily unto the bowels, excites those parts, and excites them unto expulsion. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 2.

To GLITTER, v. n. [glitteren, Saxon.]
1. To shine; to exhibit lustre; to gleam.
Steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade. Bacon's Essay on Remarks.

Before the battle joins, from afar
The field yet glitters with the pomp of war. Dryden's Virg.

Scarcely hadst thou time to undress thy conquering blade;
It did but glitter, and the rebels fled. Gravel.

2. To be specious; to be friking.
Let them on the one hand see the most glistering temptations to discord, and on the other the dismal effects of it.
Deay of Pitt.

GLITTER, n. f. [from the verb.] Lustre; bright show;
splendour.

Clad
With what permissive glory since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

A man has reason not to flourish too much upon the glitter of his fortune, for fear there should be too much alloy in it.
Collier on Pride.

GLITTERAND. Shining; sparkling. A participle used by Chaucer and the old English poets. This participial termination is still retained in Scotland.

GLOBE, n. f. A kind of orbicular fish.
GLOBE, n. f. [globe, Latin.] A globe.

It hath single circumscribed leaves, like the ranunculus: the cup of the flower consists of five small leaves of the same colour with the flower. Miller.

GLOBE, n. f. [globe, Latin.] A globe.

It hath the whole appearance of a thistle: the leaves are produced alternately: the florets consist of one leaf, which is divided into five segments, and is hollow, and each single floret has a scaly cup: the flowers are collected into a spherical head, which has the common cup or covering. Miller.

GLOBOSE, adj. [globose, Latin.] Spherical; round.
Regions, to which
All thy dominion, Adam, is no more
Than what this garden is to all the earth,
And all the sea; from one entire globe
Stretch'd into longitude. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Then form'd the moon
Globe, and every magnitude of stars. Milton's Par. Lost.

GLOBOSITY, n. f. [from globose.] Sphericity; sphericity.

Why the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, where the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionally, 'till at last it appear not at all: no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth. Ray on the Creation.

GLOBOUS, adj. [globose, Latin.] When the accent is intended to be on the first syllable, the word should be written globose.

When on the first syllable: I have transferred hither a passage of Milton, in which this rule has been neglected.] Spherical; round.

Wide over all the plain, and wider far
Than all this globe earth in plain outspread,
Such are the courts of God! Milton.

The brazen instruments of death discharge
Horrible flames, and turbid streaming clouds;
Large globous irons fly, of dreadful hiss,
Singing the air. Phillips.

GLOBULAR, adj. [globulus, Latin.] In form of a small sphere;
round; spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids seemeth to be globular, there being no other figure so well fitted to the making of fluidity. Gregory's Optic, Sect. b. i. c. 2.

GLOBULARIA, n. f. [Lat. globularis, Fr.] A flower, consisting of many florets, which are divided into several segments, and have one lip. Miller.

GLOBULE, n. f. [globule, Fr. globulus, Lat.] Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical figure, as the red particles of the blood, which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope. These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quicksilver. Quincy.

The hailstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre, to intercept the light within the halo. Newton's Opt.

Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum: the red globules are elastic, and will break:
the vessels which admit the smaller globules, cannot admit the greater without a dilate. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GLOBULOUS, adj. [from globule.] In form of a small sphere;
round.

The whiteness of such globular particles proceeds from the air included in the froth. Boyle.

or sphere.

GLOOM, n. f. [gloom, Saxon, twilight.]

1. Imperfect darkness; dimness; obscurity; defect of light.
Glowing embers through the room,
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Miller.

This the feat,
That we must change for heav'n's? This mournful gloom,
For that celestial light? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

The still night, not now, as ere men fell,
Wholesome, and cool, and mild; but with black air
Accompany'd; with damps, and dreadful gloom. Milton.

Now warm in love, now withering in thy bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom. Pope.

2. Cloudiness of aspect; heaviness of mind; fullness.

To Gloom, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine obscurely, as the twilight. This sense is not now in use.
His glistering armour made
A little glowing light much like a shade. Fairy Queen.

1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dimness.
2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look; heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neglect spreads gloominess upon their humour, and makes them grow sullen and unconvertible. Chatter of the Sylph.

The gloominess in which sometimes the minds of such little men are involved, very often stands in need of such little in-citements to mirth and laughter as are apt to disperse melancholy. Adams's Spectator, N° 175.

GLOOMY, adj. [from gloom.]

1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark; dismal for want of light.
These were from without
The growing miseries, which Adam saw
Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade,
To sorrow abandon'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Deep in a cavern dwells the drowsy god,
Whose gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,
Nor setting vists, nor the lightsome noon. Dryden's Fables.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomier, just as the sun is bright or more overcast. Pope's Letters.

2. Dark of complexion.
That fair field
Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flow'rs,
Herself a fairer flow'r, by gloomy Dis
Was gather'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

3. Sullen; melancholy; cloudy of look; heavy of heart.
GLOOMY, adj. [from gloom.] Illustrious; honourable; decorated with glory; dignified with honours.

Old respect
As I suppose, toward your once glory'd friend,
My son now captive, hither hath inform'd
Your younger feet, while mine cast back with age Came lagging after. Milton's Agonistes.

GLORIFICATION, n. f. [glorification, Fr. from glorify.] The act of giving glory.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thank-giving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation. Taylor.

To GLORIFY, v. a. [glorifier, French; glorificare, Latin.]

1. To procure honour or praise to one.
Two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in. Shakespeare's K. John.

Justice is their virtue: that alone
Makes them fit sure, and glorifies the throne. Daniel.

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.
God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged. Hooker, b. vi.

This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alleged at that time as an argument for the truth. Hooker, b. vi. f. 42.

Good fellows, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

All nations shall glorify thy name. Pf. lxxxvi. 9.

This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end; and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver. Tillotson.

3. To praise; to honour; to extol.
Whomsoever they find to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify. Spenser on Ireland.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall
Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

4. To exalt to glory or dignity.
If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him. Jo. xiii. 32.

Whom he justified, them he also glorified. Rom. viii. 30.

The soul, being immortal, will, at some time or other, resume its body again in a glorified manner. Aylmer's Parergon.

GLORIOUS, adj. [gloriosus, Latin; glorieux, French.]

1. Boastful; proud; haughty; ostentatious.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy. Bacon.

They that are glorious must needs be factious; for all bravery stands upon comparisons. Bacon, Essay 55.

2. Noble; illustrious; excellent.

Let

GLO

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world. Dan. iii. 22.

Impartial justice holds her equal scales,
Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;
If over thee thy glorious foe prevails,
He now defends the cause that once was thine. Prior.

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,
And act like men who claim that glorious title. Addison's Cato.
Glorious, v. adv. [from glorious.] Nobly; splendidly; illustriously.

They inspire with those celestial flames, which shine so gloriously in their works. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true critics dare not mend. Pope.

Glorious, n. f. [from glorie, French; gloria, Latin.] Among the old poets it was used sometimes as one syllable, gl're.

1. Praise paid in adoration. Luke ii. 14.
2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me to thy glory. Psal. lxxiii. 24.

Then enter into glory, and resume
His seat at God's right hand, exalted high Above all names in heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.
Think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney.

Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
'Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought. Shak. H. VI.

And with that word and warning soon was dight,
Each soldier longing for near coming glory. Fairfax, b. i.

Can we imagine that either the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries, could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea. Burnet.

4. Splendour; magnificence.
Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. Matt. vi. 29.

Treated to ill, chas'd from your throne,
Returning, you adorn the town;
And with a brave revenge do show
Their glory went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison's Spectator.

5. Lustre; brightness.
Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie;
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope's Winter.

From opening fies may streaming glories shine,
And faints embrace thee with a love like mine. Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of faints in picture.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South's Sermons.

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and fits like a glory upon the countenance. Collier of the Aspects.

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.
By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end. Wisd. xiv. 14.

8. Generous pride.
The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto. Sidney, b. ii.

To GLORIFY, v. n. [from glorior, Latin.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgment glorifying when he had happened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief. Sidney, b. ii.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof, and Zuinglius batter but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hooker, b. v. f. 42.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shakespeare.

Your glorifying is not good. 1 Cor. v. 6.

Thou hast seen mount Atlas,
While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet.

It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height. Addison's Cato.

This title is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live. Addison's Freeholder, N° 1.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar? Atter.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity. Clarissa.

To GLOSE, v. a. To flatter; to collogue. Hammer. See TO GLOZE.

GLO

GLOSS, n. f. [from glossa, Greek; gloss, French.]

1. A scholium; a comment.
They never hear sentence, which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture explained, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hickes, b. v. f. 22.

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach,
With general voice, that souls can never die;
'Tis not man's flattering gloss, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.

Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting ill glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right. Havel.

All this, without a gloss or comment,
He could unidle in a moment. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 1.

In many places he has perverted my meaning by his glosses, and interpreted my words into blasphemy and bawdry, of which they were not guilty. Dryden's Fables, Priapus.

They give the scandal, and the wife discern;
Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn. Dryden.

Explaining the text in short glosses, was Accursius's method. Baker's Reflections on Learning.

Indentures, cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation.
Poor painters of this silly poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceit;
One brings the stuff, the other flames the coin,
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney, b. ii.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker, Priapus.

He seems with forged quaint conceit
To set a gloss upon his bad intent. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The common gloss
Of theologians. Milton.

3. Superficial lustre.
His iron coat, all over grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whose glittering gloss dark'ned with filthy dust. Fai. Queen.

You are a sectary,
That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weakness. Shaksp.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Do sit like leaden weights and dross upon us. Shaksp.

The doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so the glittering of a blade. Bacon's Physic Rem.

Weeds that the wind did toss
The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss, Chapman's Iliad, b. xiii.

Like that of oil. South's Sermons.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. South's Sermons.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the Spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them. Addison's Spectator, N° 412.

To GLOSS, v. n. [from glosser, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To comment.
Thou detain'st Brifeis in thy hands,
By priestly glossing on the gods commands. Dryd. Fables.

2. To make sly remarks.
Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And laughing gloss'd, that Abra serv'd so well. Prior.

To GLOSS, v. n.

1. To explain by comment.
No woman shall succeed in Salique land;
Which Salique land the French unjustly gloss
To be the realm of France. Shakespeare's Henry V.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.
Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hooker's Sermons.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.
Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause. Phillips's Britain.

But thou, who lately of the common strain
Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a faint-like show,
Then I resume the freedom which I gave,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden's Pers.

4. To gloss, v. n. [from glossare, Latin; glossaire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, the most learned of the Romans when delubrum was applied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo dei simulacrum dedicatum est; and also in the old glossaries.

GLO

I could add another word to the glossary. Baker.

GLOSSA'TOR, n. f. [from glossator, French, from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgment, and not to become an evidence: but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect, the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliff.

GLOSSER, n. f. [from glosser, Latin.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator.

2. A polisher.

GLOSSINESS, n. f. [from glossy.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre.

Those grains were as like little cubes as if they had been made by a skilful jeweller, and their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt. Boyle.

GLOSSOGRAPHY, n. f. [from glossa and γραφω.] A scholiast; a commentator.

GLOSSOGRAPHY, n. f. [from glossa and γραφω.] The writing of commentaries.

GLOSSY, adj. [from gloss.] Shining; smoothly polished.

There came towards us a person of place: he had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water-camblet, of an excellent azure colour, far more glossy than ours. Bacon.

The rest entire

Shone with a glossy scurf.

His furcoat was a bearskin on his back;
His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven black. Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home,
For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden's Virgil.

GLOVE, n. f. [from glove, Saxon, from klafus, Danish, to divide.] Cover of the hands.

Like an uproar in a town,
Before them every thing went down;
They flew about like chaff 't' the wind;
For halts some left their masks behind,
Some could not stay their gloves to find.

A wreath of laurel were on his hands, and on his head. Dryden.

To GLOVE, v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limbs,
Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief,
Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch;
A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

The next he preys on is her palm,
That almsman of transpiring balm;
So soft, 'tis air but once remov'd;
Tender as 'twere a jelly glove'd. Cleveland.

GLOVER, n. f. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a Glover's paring knife? Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

To GLOUT, v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology.] To glut; to look full.

It is still used in Scotland.
She lurks in midst of all her den, and freaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,
Where, glowing round her rock, to fish the falls. Chapman.

Glowing with fallen spight, the fury shook
Her clotted locks, and blasted with each look. Garth.

To GLOW, v. n. [from glovan, Saxon; gloven, Dutch.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.
But silence silence lesseneth not my fire,
But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will reveal what ye so much desire. Fairy Queen, b. i.

His goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and mountains of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn
Their office upon a tawny front. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to show her innocency, did take seven glowing trows, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milt. Par. L.

2. To burn with vehement heat.
Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison's Ovid.

How op'ning heav'n's their happy regions show,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow. Smith.

3. To feel heat of body.

Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats? Addison's Cato.

4. To exhibit a strong bright colour.

With faule that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue. Milton.

Clad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays. Dryden.

A malicious joy,
Whose red and fiery beams cast through your village
A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

From the mingled strength of shade and light,
A new creation rises to my sight;
Such heav'nly figures from his pencil flow,
So warm with life his blended colours glow.

Amidst the soft variety I'm lost. Addison's Savage.

Like th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse.

Fair ideas flow,
Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,
Can move the god. Pope.

Each pleasing blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow. Pope.

Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole. Pope.

From her naked limbs of glowing white,
In folds loose floating, fell the fainter lawn. Thomson.

5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.

You strive in vain
To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well
The inward glowings of a heart in love. Addison's Cato.

Fore'd compliments and formal bows
Will shew thee just above neglect;
The fire with which thy lover glows,
Will settle into cold respect. Prior.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire. Prior.

Let the gay conscience of a life well spent Calm ev'ry thought, inspire ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

With furies surrounded,
Despairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope.

So perish all, whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow
For others good, or melt at others woe. Pope.

To praise is always hard,
When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.

A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a full heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell.

To GLOW, v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakespeare.

GLOW, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Shining heat.

2. Vehemence of passion.

3. Brightness or vividness of colour.

The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain. Shakespeare.

A waving glow his bloomy beds displays;
Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope, Epistle iv.

GLOWWORM, n. f. [from glow and worm.] A small creeping insect with a luminous tail.

The honey bags steal from the humble bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes. Shakespeare.

The glowworm shews the matter to be near,
And 'gins to pale his uneffectual fire. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

A great light drowneth a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the fun that of a glowworm. Bacon's Natural History.

The man, who first upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found
A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels shone:

He held it dear, 'till by the springing day
Inform'd, he threw the worthless worm away. Waller.

To GLOZE, v. n. [from glezan, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.

Man will hearken to his glowing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

So glow'd the tempter, and his poem tun'd:
Into the heart of Eve his words made way. Milt. Par. Lost.

A false glowing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. South.

Now for a glowing speech,
Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship. Phillips.

GLU

GLOZE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Flattery; insinuation.
Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by. Shakespeare.
2. Specious show; glois.
Precious couches full oft are shak'd with a fever;
If then a bodily evil in a bodily gloze be not hidden,
Shall such morning dews be an ease to the heat of a love's fire? Shakespeare, b. i.
GLUE. n. f. [glu, Fr. gluten, Lat. glut, Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a gelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.
Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon's Natural History.
To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse. Blackmore.
The clearest, driest, and most transparent glue is the best.
Moxon's Mech. Exer.
The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbutnot on Aliments.
TO GLUE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To join with a viscous cement.
I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glue many friends to thee. Shakespeare, H. VI.
Whoso teacheth a fool is as one that glues a postherd together. Ecclus. xxii. 7.
The custom of crowning the Holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinzel crown, or a circle of stars, glued to the canvas over the head of the figure. Addison on Italy.
Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air, the flesh will glue together with its own native balm. Darham.
2. To hold together.
The parts of all homogeneal hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest, that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton's Opt.
3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.
Those wasps in a honey-pot are so many sensual men, that are plunged in their lusts and pleasures; and when they are once glued to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Estrange, Fable 126.
Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts, do debase mens minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Tillotson's Sermons.
She curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:
Then to the heart ador'd the devoutly *glue*d
Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd. Dryden.
I hear thee, view these, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms. Pope.
GLUE-BOILER. n. f. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to make glue.
GLUE. n. f. [from glue.] One who cements with glue.
GLUM. adj. [A low cant word formed by corrupting gloom.]
Sullen; stubbornly grave.
Some, when they hear a story, look glum, and cry, Well, what then? Guardian.
TO GLUT. v. a. [engloutir, French; glutis, Lat. to swallow;
glutis.]
1. To swallow; to devour.
'Till cram'd and gorg'd, nigh burst
With suck'd and glutted offal. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to sate; to disgust.
The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.
Love breaks friendship, whose delights
Feed, but not glut our appetites. Denham.
What way remove
His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils. Dry.
No more, my friend;
Here let our glutted execution end. Dryden's Æn.
I found
The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new. Prior.
3. To feast or delight even to satiety.
With death's carcass glut the grave. Milton.
His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes. Dryden.
A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole. Dryden's State of Innocence.
4. To overfill; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retelling too much of a bad commodity at once. Arbutnot's Art of Politic Lying.
5. To faturate.
The menstrum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it. Higley.
GLUT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. That which is gorged or swallowed.
Disgorging foul
Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail
Of iron globes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.
So death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
Be forc'd to satisfy his ravenous maw. Milton's Par. Lost.
Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights. L'Estrange, Fable 11.
A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, call me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope to Swift.
3. More than enough; overmuch.
If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it. Ben. Jonson's Discoveries.
4. Any thing that fills up a passage.
The water some suppose to pass continually from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs and rivers, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means, arrested in their passage.
Moxon's Natural History.
GLUTINOUS. adj. [glutimex, French, from gluten, Latin.]
Gluey; viscous; tenacious.
The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects: the one, that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members.
Bacon's Natural History, N. 900.
Next this marble venom'd feat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat. Milton.
Nourishment too viscous and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force. Arbutnot on Aliments.
GLUTINOUSNESS. n. f. [from glutinous.] Viscosity; tenacity.
There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts. Clype.
GLUTINON. n. f. [glutiton, French, from glutis, Latin, to swallow.]
1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.
The Chinese eat horsethief at this day, and some glutiton have used to have catsfish baked. Bacon's Natural History.
Through Macer's gullet the runs down,
When the vile glutiton dines alone;
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Bibb's endless draught. Prior.
2. One eager of any thing to excess.
The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
All those free joys insatiably to prove,
With which rich beauty feasts the glutiton love. Cowley.
Glutiton in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal arts so impiously employ. Granville.
TO GLUTTONISE. v. n. [from glutiton.] To play the glutiton;
to be luxurious.
GLUTTONOUS. adj. [from glutiton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted overmuch with food.
When they would smile and fawn upon his debts,
And take down all interest in their glut maws. Shakespeare.
The exceeding luxuriousness of this glutitonous age, wherein we press nature with overweighty burdens, and hindering her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Raleigh.
Thou well observe
The rule of not too much, by temperance taught
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, not glutitonous delight. Milton's Par. Lost.
GLUTTONOUSLY. adv. [from glutitonous.] With the voracity of a glutiton.
GLUTTONY. n. f. [gluttonie, Fr. from glutiton.] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.
Their sumptuous glutitonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantick stone. Milton's Par. Lost.
Well may they fear some miserable end,
Whom glutiton and want at once attend. Dryden's Juven.
The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry; but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion, in plain English, glutiton and laziness. Arbutnot.
GLUTY. adj. [from glut.]
2. Viscous; tenacious; glutinous. It

GLU

GNO

It is called balsamick mixture, because it is a gly spumous matter. Harvey on Confluxions.
With gly wax some new foundations lay
Of virgin combs. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.
Whatever is the composition of the vapour, let it have but one quality of being very gly or viscous, and it will mechanically solve all the phenomena of the grotto. Addison.
GLYN. n. f. [Irish; gleann, glyn, plur. Erse; gleann, Scottish.]
A hollow between two mountains.
Though he could not beat out the Irish, yet he did shut

And felly gnar, until day's enemy
Did him appeale. Poetry Queen, b. i. cant. 1.
Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy hide,
And wolves are gnarling who shall gnaw thee first. Shakespeare.
Gnarling forrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it, and sets it light. Shakespeare, R. II.
The gnarling porter durst not whine for doubt;
Still were the furies while their sovereign spoke. Fairfax.
GNARLED. adj. [gnar, nar, or nary, is in Staffordshire a hard knot of wood which boys drive with sticks.] Knotty.
Merciful heav'n!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
Split'st the unweadable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shak. Measure for Measure.
TO GNASH. v. a. [knafchen, Dutch.] To strike together; to clash.
The seer, who could not yet his wrath assuage,
Rowl'd his green eyes, that spark'd with his rage,
And gnash'd his teeth. Dryden's Virg. Georg.
TO GNASH. v. n.
1. To grind or collide the teeth.
He shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away. Pf. eccl. 10.
There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Mat. viii.

from gate to gate throughout the camp. Ex. xxxii. 27.
The sun, which once did shine alone,
Hung down his head, and with'd for night;
When he beheld twelve furs for one
Gang about the world, and giving light. Herbert.
This seen, the rest at awful distance stood,
As if they had been there as servants set;
To stay, or to go on, as he thought good,
And not pursue, but wait on his retreat. Dryden's Ann. Mir.
Not turning them going, till you have given them all the satisfaction they are capable of; and so leading them by your answers into farther questions. Locke.
History only acquaints us that his fleet went up the Elbe, he having carried his arms as far as the banks of that river.
Arbutnot on Cæsar.
The last advice I give you relates to your behaviour when Stung with delight, is goaded on by thee. Dryden's Lucan.

- GOAL: n. f. [gaule, French, a long pole set up to mark the bounds of the race.]
 1. The landmark set up to bound a race; the point marked out to which racers run.
 As at the Olympian games, or Pythian fields,
 Part curb their fiery steeds, or floun the goal
 With rapid wheels. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
 And the slope ran his upward beam
 Shoots against the dusky pole,
 Pacing toward the other goal. Milton.
2. The starting post.
 Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start,
 The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
 Rush to the race? Dryden's Virg. Georg.
3. The final purpose; the end to which a design tends.
 Our poet has always the goal in his eye, which directs him in his race: some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means, which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden's Ovid, Preface.
 Each individual seeks a fev'ral goal;
 But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole. Pope.
 So man, who here seems principal alone,
 Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown;
 Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
 'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole. Pope's Essay on Man.
4. It is sometimes improperly written for goat, or gail.
 GOAR: n. f. [garra, Welsh.] Any edging sewed upon cloth can be swallowed at once.

 Therewith she spew'd out of her filthy maw
 A flood of poison, horrible and black,
 Full of great lumps of flesh and goblets raw. Fairy Queen.
 By devilish policy art thou grown great,
 And, like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd
 With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart. Shakespeare's H. VI.
 The cooks, slicing it into little goblets, prick it on a prog of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Saunders's Travels.
 The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
 Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den,
 Belching raw goblets from his maw, o'ercharg'd
 With purple wine and cruddl'd gore confus'd. Addison.
- TO GOBBET: v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow at a mouth-
 ful. A low word.
 Down comes a kite powdering upon them, and goblets up both together. L'Etrange, Fable 4.
- TO GOBBLE: v. a. [gobler, to swallow, old French.] To swallow hastily with tumult and noise.
 The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up now and then a piece of the coat along with them. L'Estr.
 Of last year's corn in barn great store;
 Fat turkeys gobbling at the door. Prior.
 The time too precious now to waste,
 And supper gobbled up in haste,
 Again afield to cards they run. Swift.
- GOBBLER: n. f. [from gobble.] One that devours in haste; a gormand; a greedy eater.
- GOBETWEEN: n. f. [go and between.] One that transacts business by running between two parties.
 Even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say I shall be with her between ten and eleven. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
- GOBLER: n. f. [goblet, French.] A bowl, or cup, that holds a large draught.
 My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shakespeare's Rich. II.
 We love not loaded boards, and goblets crown'd;
 But free from surfeits our repose is found. Denham.
 Crown high the goblets with a cheerful draught;
 Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought. Dryden.
- GOBLIN: n. f. [French; goblines, which Spenser has once retained, writing it in three syllables. This word some derive from the Gibellines, a faction in Italy; so that elf and goblin is Guelph and Gibelline, because the children of either party were terrified by their nurses with the name of the other: but it appears that elf is Welsh, and much older than those factions. Elph. Uylbon are phantoms of the night, and the Germans likewise have long had spirits among them named Gobelds, from which gobelin might be derived.]
1. An evil spirit; a walking spirit; a frightful phantom.
 Angels and ministers of grace defend us!
 Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,
 Bring with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell? Shak.
 To whom the goblin, full of wrath, reply'd,
 Art thou that traitor angel? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
 Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and goblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark. Locke.
2. A fairy; an elf.
 His son was Elfinel, who overcame
 The wicked goblins in bloody field;
 But Elfant was of most renowned fame,
 Who of all crystal did Panthea build. Fairy Queen, b. ii.
 Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints
 With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews
 With aged cramps. Shakespeare's Tempest.

GOD

- Mean time the village rouzes up the fire,
 While well attested, and as well believ'd,
 Heard solemn goes the goblin story round. Thomson's Winter.
- GOD: n. f. [gods, Saxon, which likewise signifies good.] The same word passes in both senses with only accidental variations through all the Teutonic dialects.]
1. The Supreme Being God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. John iv. 24.
- God above
 Deal between thee and me: for ever now
 I put myself to thy direction. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self-existent, eternal, immense, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being; and therefore also a being who is and ought to be esteemed most sacred or holy. Greus's Cymol. Sacr. b. ii.
2. A false god; an idol.
 He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only,
 he shall be utterly destroyed. Exod. xxii. 10.
 As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods,
 They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
 The freezing North, and Hyperborean seas,
 And Scythian colds, and Thracia's Winter coast,
 Where stand thy steeds, and thou art honour'd most. Dryd.
3. Any person or thing deified or too much honoured.
 Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly. Phil. iii.
 I am not Licio,
 Nor a musician as I seem to be;
 But one that scorns to live in this disguise,
 For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
 And makes a god of such a cullion. Shakespeare's
To God: v. a. [from the noun.] To deify; to exalt to divine honours.
 This last old man,
 Lov'd me above the measure of a father;
 Nay, call'd me, indeed. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
- GO-CHILD: n. f. [god and child.] A term of spiritual relation; one for whom one became sponsor at baptism, and promised to see educated as a Christian.
- GO-DAUGHTER: n. f. [god and daughter.] A girl for whom one became sponsor in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.
- GO-DESS: n. f. [from god.] A female divinity.
 Hear, nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father! Shakef.
 A woman I forswore; but I will prove;
 Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:
 My vow was earthy, thou a heav'nly love. Shakespeare.
 I long have waited in the temple nigh,
 Built to the gracious goddess's Clemency;
 But reverence thou the power. Dryden's Fables.
 From his feat the goddess born arose,
 And thus undaunted spoke. Dryden's Fables.
 When the daughter of Jupiter presented herself among a crowd of goddesses, she was distinguished by her graceful stature and superior beauty. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 1.
 Modestly with-held the goddess's train. Pope's Odyssey.
- GO-DESS-LIKE: adj. [goddess and like.] Resembling a goddess.
 Then female voices from the shore I heard;
 A maid amidst them goddess-like appear'd. Pope's Odyssey.
- GO-DFATHER: n. f. [god and father.] The sponsor at the font.
 He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour as to stand godfather to his child. Bacon's Henry VII.
 Confirmation, a profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the apostles, consists in the child's undertaking in his own name the baptismal vow; and that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now, as in baptism, as his procurator. Hammond.
- GO-DEAD: n. f. [from god.]
 1. Godship; deity; divinity; divine nature.
 Be content;
 Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift. Shakespeare's Cymbel.
 At the holy mount
 Of heav'n's high-seated top, th' imperial throne
 Of godhead, fix'd for ever firm and sure,
 The fatal pow'r arriv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
 So may thy godhead be confest,
 So the returning year be blest. Prior.
2. A deity in person; a god or goddess.
 Were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.
 Adoring first the genius of the place,
 The nymphs and native godheads yet unknown. Dryd. En.
- GO-DLESS: adj. [from god.] Without sense of duty to God;
 atheistical; wicked; irreligious; impious.
 Of these two sorts of men, both godless, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known. Hobbes.
 That goddess crew
 Rebellious. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi. l. 9.
 For

GOG

For faults not his, for guilt and crimes
Of godless men, and of rebellious times,
Him his ungrateful country sent,
Their best Camillus, into banishment. Dryden.

GO'DLIKE. adj. [god and like.] Divine; resembling a divinity; supremely excellent.

Thus Adam his illustrious guest befought,
And thus the godlike angel answer'd mild. Milt. Par. Lost.
Musing and much revolving in his breast,
How best the mighty work he might begin
Of favour to mankind, and which way first Publish his godlike office now mature. Paradise Regain'd.
That prince shall be to wife and godlike, us, by established laws of liberty, to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind. Locke.

GO'DLING. n. f. [from god.] A little divinity; a diminutive god.

Thy puny godlings of inferior race,
Whose humble statues are content with brags. Dryd. Juven.

GO'DLINESS. n. f. [from godly.] 1. Piety to God.
2. General observation of all the duties prescribed by religion.

Virtue and godliness of life are required at the hands of the minister of God. Hooker, b. v. f. 2.

GO'DLY. adj. [from god.] 1. Pious towards God.
Grant that we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life. Common Prayer.

2. Good; righteous; religious.
Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail among the children of men. Pf. xii. 1.

GO'DLY. adv. Piously; righteously.
The apostle St. Paul teacheth, that every one which will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. Hooker, b. v.

GO'DLYHEAD. n. f. [from godly.] Goodness; righteousness. An old word.

For this, and many more such outrage,
I crave your godlyhead to alivage
The rancorous rigour of his might. Spenfer.

GO'DMOTHER. n. f. [god and mother.] A woman who has become sponsor in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

GO'DSHIP. n. f. [from god.] The rank or character of a god; deity; divinity.

Discouraging largely on this theme,
O'er hills and dales their godships came. Prior.

GO'DSON. n. f. [god and son.] One for whom one has been sponsor at the font.

What, did my father's godson seek your life?
He whom my father named? your Edgar? Shaksp. K. Lear.

GO'DWARD. adj. To Godward is toward God. So we read, Hac Arctusa tenus, for batennus Arctusa.

And such trust have we through Christ to Godward. 2 Cor.

GO'DWIT. n. f. [gods, good, and wit, an animal.] A bird of particular delicacy.

Nor ortelans nor godwits crown his board. Cowley.

GO'DYELD. adj. [corrupted from God shield or protect.] A term of thanks. Now not used.

Herein I teach you,
How you should bid godlyd us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble. Shaksp. Macbeth.

GOEL. adj. [golen, Saxon.] Yellow. An old word.

In March at the furthest, dry season or wet,
Hop-roots so well chosen let skilful go set;
The goeler and younger, the better I love;
Well gutted and pared, the better they prove. Tuff. Huib.

GO'ER. n. f. [from go.] 1. One that goes; a runner.

I would they were in Africk both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate them
But goers backward. Shaksp. All's well that ends well.

Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening official impertinence of those goers between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me. Pope to Swift.

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

To GO'GLE. v. n. To look afloat.

Infam'd all over with disgrace,
To be seen by her in such a place,
Which made him hang his head, and scowl,
And wink and goggle like an owl. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 1.

Nor sighs, nor groans, nor goggling eyes did want. Dryd.

GO'GLE-EYED. adj. [resemblance, Saxon.] Squint-eyed; not looking straight.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unseemly to look upon, except to men that be goggle-eyed themselves. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

GO'ING. n. f. [from going.] 1. The act of walking.

When nobles are their tailors tutors,
No hereticks burnt, but wenches suitors,
Then comes the time, who lives to see't,
That going shall be us'd with feet. Shaksp. King Lear.

2. Pregnancy.

The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight; that is, the twentieth part of their going. Greav's Censur. Sac. b. iii. c. 3.

3. Departure.

Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound. Milt. P. Lost.

GOLA. n. f. The same with CYMATIUM, which see.

In a cornice the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble flow. Spenfer.

GOLD. n. f. [gols, Saxon; golud, riches, Welsh. It is called gold in our English tongue either of geol, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gelten, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gels, for money. Peacoch on Drawing.

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies; not to be injured either by air or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt, and is most easily of all metals amalgamated with silver. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. It never constitutes a peculiar ore, but is found most frequently among ore of silver. Native gold is seldom found pure, but has almost constantly silver with it, and very frequently copper. Gold dust, or native gold, in small masses, is mixed among the sand of rivers in many parts of the world. It is found, in the greatest abundance, bedded in masses of hard stone, often at the depth of a hundred and fifty fathoms in the mines of Peru. Pure gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain. Hill on Fossils.

Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, plantiness or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon's Nat. History.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shaksp. Rich. III.

We commonly take shape and colour for so presumptive ideas of several species, that, in a good picture, we readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Locke.

The gold freight vessel, which mail tempests beat
He fees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryd. Tyrant. Lev.

2. Money.

For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive. Shaksp. Henry V.

The sooner to effect what I intended.
Thou, that so stoutly hast resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows. Shaksp. H. VI.

If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog,
And give it Timon, why, the dog coins gold. Shaksp. Timon.

It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσον ἀποδοῖν; and animam; moreque aureas dedit in aspra. Horace.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold;
A lad of life, an imp of fume. Shaksp. Henry V.

GOLD of Pleasure. n. f. [myagrum.]

It hath a flower of four leaves, placed in form of a cross, out of whose cup arises the pointal, which becomes a tubulated fruit, having one cell, in which is included an oblong seed, and two empty cells at the point.

Goldbeater. n. f. [gold and beat.] One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold so as to gild other matter.

Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest coined gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Bosch.

This gilder was a goldbeater.

Goldbeater's Skin. n. f. The intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice.

When your gilliflowers blow, if they break the pod, open it with a penknife or lancet at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GO'LBOUND. adj. [gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold. Thy air, Thou other goldbound brow, is like the first. Shaksp. Macbeth.

GO'LDEN. adj. [from gold.]

GOL

GO'LDEN. adj. [from gold.]

1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.
O would to God that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel to fear me to the brain. Shaksp. R. III.

Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed,
In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.
So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep. Shaksp. As You Like It.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perkd' up in a glistening grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

Heaven's golden winged herald late he saw
To a poor Galilean virgin sent. Crahaue.

To her hard yoke you must hereafter bow,
Howe'er the shines all golden to you now. Dryden.

And see the guardian angels of the good,
Reclining soft on many a golden cloud. Rowe's Royal Cove.

3. Yellow; of the colour of gold.
Golden rustling hath a gold coloured coat under a russet hair, and its flesh of a yellow colour. Mortimer.

4. Excellent; valuable.

I have bought
Golden opinions from all sort of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest glose,
Not cast aside so soon. Shaksp. Macbeth.

That verse which they commonly call golden, has two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Dryden.

Thence arises that golden rule of dealing with others as we would have others deal with us. Watts's Logic.

5. Happy; resembling the age of gold.
They say many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world. Shaksp. As You Like It.

GO'LDEN Saxifrage. n. f. [chrysophanum.]

It hath a perennial fibrous root: the flowercup is divided into four parts: the flower has no visible petals, but eight lamina, or threads, which surround the ovary: the pointal becomes a membranous vessel, which is forked and bivalve, including many small seeds. It grows wild upon marshy soil, and in shady woods. Miller.

GO'LDENLY. adv. [from golden.] Delightfully; splendidly.
My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit. Shaksp. As You Like It.

GO'LDFINCH. n. f. [goldspine, Saxon.] A singing bird, so named from his golden colour. This is called in Staffordshire a proud taylor.

Of singing birds they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, Canary-birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others. Carew.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.

GO'LDFINDER. n. f. [gold and find.] One who finds gold. A term ludicrously applied to those that empty jakes.

His empty paunch that he might fill,
He suck'd his vitals through a quill;
Untouch'd it pass'd between his grinders,
Or't had been happy for goldfinders. Swift.

he might exercise his goodness. Sidney, b. ii.
There is in all things an appetite or desire, whereby they incline to something which they may be; all which perfections are contained under the general name of goodness. Hooker.

All goodness
Is poison to thy stomach.
—Yes, that goodness
Of gleaming all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion:
The goodness of your intercepted packets
You writ to the pope against the king; your goodness,
Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious. Sh. H. VIII.
There's no goodness in thy face. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
The goodness of every thing is measured by its end and use, and that's the best thing which serves the best end and purpose. Tillotson, Sermon i.
All severally made him very particular relations of the strength of the Scots army, the excellent discipline that was observed in it, and the goodness of the men. Clarendon, b. ii.
No body can say that tobacco of the same goodness is risen in respect of itself: one pound of the same goodness will never exchange for a pound and a quarter of the same goodness. Locke.

Go^oDS. n. f. [from good.]

Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spy'd,
Which erst I saw when goodly Dobson dy'd. Gay's Postals.
Plain goodly would no longer down;
Twas madam in her program gown. Swift.
GOOSE. n. f. [plural geese.] [gor, Saxon; goet, Dutch; gawe, Erie, sing. gawes, plural.]
1. A large waterfowl proverbially noted, I know not why, for foolishness.

Thou cream-faced down,
Where got'st thou that goose look? Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Since I pluckt geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten 'till lately. Shakespeare.
Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?
Goose, if I had you upon Sarum plain,
I'd drive ye cackling home to Camelot. Shakespeare, King Lear.
Birds most easy to be drawn are waterfowl; as the goose and swan. Peacham on Dravings.
Nor watchful dogs, nor the more wakeful geese,
Disturb with nightly noise the sacred peace. Dryd. Fables.
2. A tailor's smoothing iron.
Come in, tailor: here you may roast your goose. Shakespeare.
Go^oSEBERRY. n. f. [goose and berry, because eaten with young geese as sauce.]

The leaves are lacinated or jagged: the whole plant is set with prickles: the fruit grows imperfectly upon the tree, having for the most part but one fruit upon a footstalk, which is of an oval or globular figure, containing many small seeds, surrounded by a pulpy substance. The species are, 1. The common gooseberry. 2. The large manured gooseberry. 3. The red hairy gooseberry. 4. The large white Dutch gooseberry.
5. The large amber gooseberry. 6. The large green gooseberry. 7. The large red gooseberry. 8. The yellow-leaved gooseberry. 9. The striped-leaved gooseberry. Miller.
August has upon his arm a basket of all manner of ripe fruits; as pears, plums, apples, gooseberries. Peacham.

Upon a gooseberry bush a snail I found;
For always snails near sweetest fruit abound. Gay's Post.
Go^oSEFOOT. n. f. [chenopodium.] Wild orch.
The seeds are single and globose in some species; but in others they are compressed: the cup of the flower is quinquefid:
the leaves grow alternately upon the stalks between the leaves. Miller.

Go^oSEGRASS. n. f. Clivers; an herb. See CLIVERS.
Goosegrass, or wild tanfy, is a weed that strong clays are very subject to. Mortimer's Husbandry.
GORBELLY. n. f. [from gor, dung, and belly, according to Skinner and Junius.] It may perhaps come from gor, Welsh, beyond, too much; or, as seems to me more likely, may be contracted from gormand, or gormand's belly, the belly of a glutton.] A big paunch; a swelling belly. A term of reproach for a fat man.

GOR

Go^oRRELLIED. adj. [from gorbally.] Fat; bigbellied; having swelling paunches.
Hang ye, gorbellied knaves, are you undone? No, ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here. Shakespeare, Henry IV, p. i.
GORD. n. f. An instrument of gaming, as appears from Ban-mont and Fletcher.
Thy dry bones can reach at nothing now, but gor and ninepins. Beaumont and Fletcher.

Let vultures gripe thy guts; for gor and Fulham holds.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
GORE. n. f. [gor, Saxon; gor, Welsh, famous matter.]

1. Blood.
A grievous wound,
From which forth gush'd a stream of gor blood thick,
That all her goodly garment stain'd around,
And into a deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground. F. Quen.
Another's crimes the youth unhappy bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guileless gor. Dryden's Am.
2. Blood clotted or congealed.
The bloody fact
Will be aveng'd; though here thou see him die,
Rolling in dust and gor. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
His horrid beard and knotted tresses stood Stiff with his gor, and all his wounds ran blood. Danham.

To GORE. v. a. [gebeian, Saxon.]
1. To stab; to pierce.
Oh, let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear. Shakespeare, R. II.
No weaker lion's by a stronger slain;
Nor from his larger tusks the forest boar
Commillion takes his brother swine to gor. Tate's Jucen.
For arms his men long pikes and jav'ins bore,
And poles with pointed steel their foes in battle gor. Dryd.
2. To pierce with a horn.
Some tof'd, some gor'd, some trampling down he kill'd.
Dryden's Preface to the Conquest of Granada.
He idly butting, feigns
His rival gor'd in every knotty trunk. Thomson's Spring.

GORGE. n. f. [gorge, French.]
1. The throat; the swallow.
There were birds also made so finely, that they did not only deceive the sight with their figures, but the hearing with their songs, which the wary instruments did make their gorge deliver. Sidney.
And now how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor. Shakespeare, Othello.
2. That which is gorged or swallowed.
And all the way, most like a brutish beast,
He pewed up his gorge, that all did him detest. Fa. Quen.

To GORGE. v. n. [gorge, French.]
1. To fill up to the throat; to glut; to satiate.
Thou detestable maw, thou womb of death,
Gorge'd with the dearest morsel of the earth. Sh. Ro. and Jul.
Being with his preference glutted, gorge'd, and full. Shakespeare.
He that makes his generation mellow,
To gorge his appetite. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Gorge with my blood thy barbarous appetite. Dryden.
I must therefore desire, that they will not gorge him either with nonsense or obscenity. Addison's Guardian.
Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia. Adelphi, Cato.
The giant, gorge'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den. Adelphi.

2. To swallow: as, the fish has gorged the hawk. Skinner. Fine GORGEIOUS. adj. [gorgeous, old French. Skinner.] Fine splendid; glittering in various colours; showy; magnificent.
O, that deceit should dwell
In such a gorgeous palace! Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
As full of spirit as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at Midsummer. Shakespeare, Ham. IV.
He bad them look upon themselves and upon their enemies themselves dreadful, their enemies gorgeous and brave. Hamlet.

The gorgeous East, with richest hand,
Pours on her kings barbaric pearl and gold. Milton.
With gorgeous wings, the marks of sov'reign sway,
The two contending princes make their way. Dryd. Virgil.
Go^oRGEOUSLY. adv. [from gorgeous.] Splendidly; magnificently; finely.
The duke, one solemn day, gorgeously clad in a suit all over spread with diamonds, lost one of them of good value. Waller.
Go^oRGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from gorgeous.] Splendour; magnificence; show.

Go^oRGET. n. f. [from gorge.] The piece of armour that defends the throat.
He with a palfy fumbling on his gorget,
Shakes in and out the rivet. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.

GOS

He did oftentimes spend the night in the church alone praying, his headpiece, gorget, and gauntlets lying by him. Knolles's History of the Turks.
See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben. Jonson, Cat.
About his neck a threefold gorget,
As rough as trebled leathern target. Hudibras, p. i. cant. 2.

Go^oRCON. n. f. [gorcon, Saxon.] A monster with snaky hairs, of which the light turned beholders to stone; any thing ugly or horrid.
Gorgons and hydras, and chimera's dire.
Why did'st thou not encounter man for man,
And try the virtue of that gorcon face
To stare me into stature. Dryden.

GORMAND. n. f. [gourmand, French.] A greedy eater; a ravenous luxurious feeder.
To GORMANDIZE. v. n. [from gormand.] To eat greedily;
to feed ravenously.

Go^oRMANDIZER. n. f. [from the verb.] A voracious eater.
GORSE. n. f. [gor, Saxon.] Furz; a thick prickly shrub that bears yellow flowers in winter.
Go^oR. adj. [from gor.]

1. Covered with congealed blood.
When two boars with rankling malice met,
Their gor sides the fresh wounds fiercely fret. Spenser.
Why do'st thou shake thy gor locks at me?
Thou can'st not say I did it.
2. Bloody; murderous; fatal. Not in use.
The obligation of our blood forbids
A gor emulation 'twixt us twain. Shak. Trail and Cressida.
Go^oSHAWK. n. f. [gor, goose, and hawk, a hawk.] A hawk of a large kind.
Such dread his awful visage on them cast;
So seem poor doves at goeshawks fight aghast. Fairfax, b. iii.

Go^oSING. n. f. [from goose.]
1. A young goose; a goose not yet full grown.
Why do you go nodding and wagging so like a fool, as if you were hipshot? says the goose to her gosling. L'Estrange.
Nature hath instructed even a brood of goslings to stick together, while the kite is hovering over their heads. Swift.
2. A cat's tail on nut-trees and pines.
Go^oSPEL. n. f. [gober rpe, or God's or good tidings; evayyidion; goshel, goshel, happy tidings, Erse.]
1. God's word; the holy book of the Christian revelation.
Thus may the gospel to the rising sun
Be spread, and flourish where it first begun. Waller.
How is a good Christian animated and cheered by a steadfast belief of the promises of the gospel? Bentley's Sermons.

2. Divinity; theology.
To Go^oSPEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fill with sentiments of religion. This word in Shakespeare, in whom alone I have found it, is used, though so venerable in itself, with some degree of irony: I suppose from the gospellers, who had long been held in contempt.

Are you so gosseld
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whole heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave? Shakespeare.
Go^oSPELLER. n. f. [from gospel.] A name of the followers of Christ, who first attempted a reformation from popery, given them by the Papists in reproach, from their professing to follow and preach only the gospel.

These gossellers have had their golden days,
Have trodden down our holy Roman faith. Roswell's J. Shore.
Go^oSSAMER. n. f. [from gossamer, low Latin.] The down of plants; the long white cobwebs which fly in the air in calm funny weather, especially about the time of Autumn. Hannmer.

A lover may bestride the gossamer,
That idles in the wanton Summer air,
And yet not fall, so light is vanity. Shakespeare, Rom. and Juliet.
Had'st thou been caught but gossamer, feathers, air,
So many fathom down precipitating,
Thou'd'st shiver'd like an egg. Shakespeare, King Lear.

Four nimble gnats the horses were,
Their harnesses of gossamer. Drayton's Nymphid.
The filmy gossamer now sits no more,
Nor halcyons bask on the short sunny shore. Dryd. Virgil.
Go^oSSIP. n. f. [from goss and pyb, relation, affinity, Saxon.]
1. One who answers for the child in baptism.
Go to a gossip's feast and gaud with me,
After so long grief such nativity:
—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. Shakespeare.

At the christening of George duke of Clarence, who was born in the castle of Dublin, he made both the earl of Kildare and the earl of Ormond his gossips. Davies on Ireland.

2. A tipping companion.
And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab,
And when she drinks against her lips I bob. Shakespeare.
3. One who runs about tattling like women at a lying-in.
To do the office of a neighbour,
And be a gossip at his labour. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 1.

'Tis sung in ev'ry street,
The common chat of gossips when they meet. Dryden.

GOV

To Go^oSIP. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To chat; to prate; to be merry.
Go to a gossip's feast and gaud with me.
—With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast. Shakespeare.
His mother was a votress of my order,
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full often hath she gossipt by my side. Shakespeare.
The market and exchange must be left to their own ways of talking; and gossippings not be robbed of their ancient privilege. Locke.

2. To be a pot-companion.
Nor met with fortune, other than at feasts,
Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossipping. Shak. K. John.
Go^oSSIPRED. n. f. [from gossipy, from gossip.]
Gossipred or compatermy, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent. Davies on Ireland.

Go^oSTING. n. f. An herb.
Got. pret. [from the verb get.]
Titus Lartius writes, they fought together; but Aufidius got off. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

If you have strength Achilles' arms to bear,
Though foul Therites got thee, thou shalt be Lov'd and esteem'd. Dryden's Juvenal.
These regions and this realm my wars have got;
This mournful empire is the loser's lot. Dryd. Innocence.
When they began to reason about the means how the sea got thicker, and away back again, there they were presently in the dark. Woodward's Natural History.

Got. part. pass. of get.
Solymann commended them for their valour in their evil haps, in a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Let him boast
His knowledge of good lost, and evil got. Milt. Par. Lost.
A gentle persuasion in reasoning, when the first point of submission to your will is got, will most times do. Locke.
If he behaves himself so when he depends on us for his daily bread, can any man say what he will do when he is got above the world? Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

Thou wert from Etna's burning entrails torn,
Got by fierce whirlwinds, and in thunder born. Pope.
Got. part. pass. of get.
Wisdom cannot be gotten for gold. Job. xxviii. 15.
Few of them, when they are gotten into an office, apply their thoughts to the execution of it. Temple.

Go^oUD. n. f. Woad: a plant. Dist.
GOVE. n. f. A mow. Tusser.
To GOVE. v. n. To mow; to put in a gove, goff, or mow.
An old word.

Load safe, carry home, follow time being fair,
Gave just in the barn, it is out of despair. Tass. Husbandry.
To GOVERN. v. a. [gouverner, French; gubernare, Latin.]

1. To rule as a chief magistrate.
This inconvenience is more hard to be redressed in the governor than the governed; as a malady in a vital part is more incurable than in an external. Spenser on Ireland.
Slaves to our passions we become, and then
It grows impossible to govern men. Waller.
2. To regulate; to influence; to direct.
The welfare of that is the chief point, which he is to carry always in his eye, and by which he is to govern all his counsels, designs, and actions. Aiterbury's Sermons.

3. To manage; to restrain.
Go alter her, she's desperate; govern her. Shak. K. Lear.
4. [In grammar.] To have force with regard to syntax: as, amo governs the accusative case.
5. To pilot; to regulate the motions of a ship.

To Go^oVERN. v. n. To keep superiority; to behave with haughtiness.
By that rule,
Your wicked atoms may be working now
To give bad counsel, that you still may govern. Dryden.

Go^oVERNABLE. adj. [from govern.] Submissive to authority; subject to rule; obedient; manageable.
The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe. Locke.

Go^oVERNANCE. n. f. [from govern.]
1. Government; rule; management.
Jonathan took the governance upon him at that time, and rose up instead of his brother Judas. 1 Mac. ix. 31.
2. Control, as that of a guardian.
Me he knew not, neither his own ill,
Till through wise handling, and fair governance,
I him recured to a better will. Fairly Quen, b. ii.
What I shall king Henry be a pupil still,
Under the furly Gloster's governance? Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. Behaviour; manners. Obsolete.
10 N GOVERNANTE.

GOV

- GOVERNANTE. n. f. [gouvernante, French.] A lady who has the care of young girls of quality. The more usual and proper word is governess.
- GOVERNESS. n. f. [gouvernante, old French, from govern.]
- A female invested with authority.

The moon, the governess of floods,
Pale in her anger, walks all the air,
That rheumatick diseases do abound.

Shakespeare.

A tutress; a woman that has the care of young ladies.
He presented himself unto her, falling down upon both his knees, and holding up his hands, as the old governess of Dænae is painted, when the suddenly saw the golden shower. Sidon.
His three younger children were taken from the governess in whole hands he put them. Clarendon, b. viii.
 - A tutress; an instructress; a directress.
Great affliction that severe governess of the life of man brings upon those souls she seizes on. More against Atheism.
- GOVERNMENT. n. f. [gouvernement, French.]
- Form of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority.

There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one exercised according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders or laws introduced by agreement or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many. Temple.
 - An establishment of legal authority.

There they shall found
Their government, and their great senate chuse
Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd. Milton.
While he survives, in concord and content
The commons live, by no divisions rent;
But the great monarch's death dissolves the government. Dryden.
Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power.
Where any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one. Swift.
 - Administration of publick affairs.

Safety and equal government are things Which subjects make as happy as their kings. Waller.
 - Regularity of behaviour.

You needs must learn, lord, to amend this fault;
Though sometimes it shews greatness, courage, blood,
Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion and disdain. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
'Tis government that makes them seem divine;
The want thereof makes them abominable. Shakespeare, H. VI.
 - Manageableness; compliance; obsequiousness.

Thy eyes windows fall,
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part deriv'd of supple government,
Shall stiff and stark, and cold appear, like death. Shakespeare.
 - Management of the limbs or body. Obsolete.

Their god
Shot many a dart at me with fierce intent;
But I them ward'd all with wary government. Fairy Queen.
- GOVERNOUR. n. f. [gouverneur, French.]
- [In grammar.] Influence with regard to construction.

One who has the supreme direction.
 - One who has the supreme direction.

It must be confessed, that of Christ, working as a creator and a governour of the world by providence, all are partakers. Hooker, b. v. f. 56.
They beget in us a great idea and veneration of the mighty author and governour of such stupendous bodies, and excite and elevate our minds to his adoration and praise. Bentley.
 - One who is invested with supreme authority in a state.

For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governour among the nations. Pf. xxii. 28.
The magistrate cannot urge obedience upon such potent grounds as the minister, if so disposed, can urge disobedience: as, for instance, if my governour should command me to do a thing, or I must die, or forfeit my estate; and the minister steps in and tells me, that I offend God, and ruin my soul, if I obey that command, 'tis easy to see a greater force in this persuasion. South's Sermons.
 - One who rules any place with delegated and temporary authority.

To you, lord governour,
Remains the censure of this hellish villain. Shakespeare, Othello.
 - A tutor; one who has care of a young man.

To Eltam will I, where the young king is,
Being ordain'd his special governour;
And for his safety there I'll best devise. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
The great work of a governour is to fashion the carriage, and form the mind; to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom. Locke.
 - Pilot; regulator; manager.

Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and

- are driven of fierce winds, yet they are turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governour listeth. Ja. iii. 4.
- GOUGE. n. f. [French.] A chisel having a round edge, for the cutting such wood as is to be rounded or hollowed. Moxon.
- GOUGERES. n. f. [from gouge, French, a camp trull.] The French diseale.
- GOUBER. n. f. [gouborde, French.]
- It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, of the expanded bell-shape, for the most part so deeply cut that it seems to consist of five distinct leaves: this, like the cucumber, has male and female flowers on the same plant. The fruit of some species are long, of others round, or bottle-shaped, and is commonly divided into six cells, in which are contained many flat oblong seeds. Miller.
 - But I will haste, and from each bough and brake,
Each plant, and juicy gourd, will pluck such choice
To entertain our angel-guest. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. v.
Gourd seeds are used in medicine; and they abound so much in oil, that a sweet and pleasant one may be drawn from them by expression: they are of the number of the four greater cold seeds, and are used in emulsions. Hill's Mat. Med.
 - A bottle [from gourd, old French. Skinner.]
The large fruit so called is often scooped hollow, for the purpose of containing and carrying wine, and other liquors; from thence any leathern bottle grew to be called by the same name, and so the word is used by Chaucer. Homer.
- GOUBRINNESS. n. f. [from gourd.] A swelling in a horse's leg after a journey.
- GOURNET. n. f. A fish.
- GOUT. n. f. [goutte, French.]
- The arthritis; a periodical disease attended with great pain.

The gout is a disease which may affect any membranous part, but commonly those which are at the greatest distance from the heart or the brain, where the motion of the fluids is the slowest, the resistance, friction, and stricture of the solid parts the greatest, and the sensation of pain, by the dilaceration of the nervous fibres, extreme. Arbutnot on Diet.
One that's lick o' th' gout, had rather Groan so in perplexity than be cur'd
By th' sure physician death. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
This very rev'rend lecher, quite worn out
With rheumatism, and crippled with his gout,
Forgets what he in youthful times has done,
And swings his own vices in his son. Dryden's Juvenal.
 - A drop, [goutte, French; gutta, Latin.] Gut for drop is still used in Scotland by physicians.

I see thee still,
And on the blade o' th' dudgeon gouts of blood,
Which was not so before. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
- GOUT. n. f. [French.] A taste. An affected cant word. The method which he has published will make these catalogues exceeding useful, and serve for a direction to any one that has a gout for the like studies. Wadsworth on Fuglio.
- GOOTWORT. n. f. [gout and wort.] An herb. Ainsworth.
- GOOTV. adj. [from gout.]
- Afflicted or diseased with the gout.

There dies not above one of a thousand of the gout, although I believe that more die gouty. Graunt's Bills of Mortal.
Knots upon his gouty joints appear,
And chalk is in his crippled fingers found. Dryden, Pers. Sat.
Most commonly a gouty constitution is attended with great acuteness of parts, the nervous fibres, both in the brain and the other extremities, being delicate. Arbutnot on Diet.
 - Relating to the gout.

GOWN. n. f. [gonna, Italian; gown, Welsh and Erse.]
- A long upper garment.

They make garments either short, as cloaks, or, as gowns, long to the ground. Abbot's Description of the World.
If ever I laid a loose-bodied gown, few me up in the skirts of it, and beat me to death with a bottom of brown thread; I said a gown. Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew.
In length of train descends her sweeping gown,
And by her graceful walk the queen of love is known. Dryden.
 - A woman's upper garment.

I despise your new gown, 'till I see you dressed in it. Pope.
 - The long habit of a man dedicated to acts of peace, as divinity, medicine, law.

The benefices themselves are so mean in Irish counties, that they will not yield any competent maintenance for any honest minister, scarcely to buy him a gown. Spenser on Ireland.
Girt in his Gabin gown the hero fat. Dryden's Zen.
 - The dress of peace.

He Mars depos'd, and arms to gowns made yield;
Successful councils did him soon approve
As fit for close intrigues as open field. Dryden.
- GO'WNED. adj. [from gown.] Dressed in a gown. A noble crew about them waited round Of sage and sober peers, all gravely gown'd. Fairy Queen.
In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
The seams with sparkling emeralds set around. Dryden.
- GO'WNMAN. n. f. [gown and man.] A man devoted to the acts of peace; one whose proper habit is a gown. Let

GRA

- Let him with pedants
Pore out his life amongst the lazy gownmen. Rever.
- Pore out that whole bench, in an age or two, be composed of mean, fawning gownmen, dependants upon the court for a morsel of bread. Swift.
- To GRABBLE. v. n. [probably corrupted from grapple.] To grapple; to feel eagerly with the hands.
My blood chills about my heart at the thought of these rogues, with their bloody hands grabbling in my guts, and pulling out my very entrails. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
- To GRABBLE. v. a. To lie prostrate on the ground. Answ.
- GRACE. n. f. [grace, French; gratia, Latin; grace, Erse.]
- Favour; kindness.

If the highest love in no base person may aspire to grace, then may I hope your beauty will not be without pity. Sidney.
O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God! Shakespeare.
Such as were popular. Daniel.
And well deserving, were advanc'd by grace. Daniel.
Is this the reward and thanks I am to have for those many acts of grace I have lately pass'd?
Yet those remov'd,
Such grace shall one just man find in his sight,
That he relents, not to blot out mankind. Milt. Par. Lost.
Noble pity held
His hand a while, and to their choice gave space
Which they would prove, his valour or his grace. Waller.
Or each, or all, may win a lady's grace;
Then either of you knights may well deserve
A princely born. Dryden's Fables.

These hymns may work on future wits, and so

May great grandchildren of thy praises grow. Donne.

He hoped his majesty did believe, that he would never make the least scruple to obey the grandchild of king James. Clarendon.

Fair daughter, and thou son and grandchild both! Milton.

He 'scaping with his gods and reliques fled,

And tow'rd the shore his little grandchild led. Denham.

GRANDDAUGHTER. n. f. [grand and daughter.] The daughter of a son or daughter.

GRANDE. n. f. [grand, French; grandis, Latin.] A man of great rank, power, or dignity.

They had some sharper and some milder differences, which might easily happen in such an interview of grandees, both vehement on the parts which they sway'd. Wotton.

When a prince or grandee manifests a liking to such a thing, men generally set about to make themselves considerable for such things. South's Sermons.

Some parts of the Spanish monarchy are rather for ornament than strength: they furnish out viceregalities for the grandees, and poets of honour for the noble families. Addison.

GRA

GRANDEVITY. n. f. [from grandævus, Latin.] Great age;

length of life.

GRANDEVOS. adj. [grandævus, Latin.] Long lived; of great age.

GRANDEUR. n. f. [French.]

1. State; splendour of appearance; magnificence.

As a magistrate or great officer, he locks himself from all approaches by the multiplied formalities of attendance, by the distance of ceremony and grandeur. South's Sermons.

2. Elevation of sentiment or language.

GRANDFATHER. n. f. [grand and father.] The father of my father or mother; the next above my father in the scale of ascend.

One was saying that his great grandfather, and grandfather, and father died at sea: said another, that heard him, an' I were as you, I would never come at sea. Why, faith he, where did your great grandfather, and grandfathers, and father die?

He answered, where but in their beds? He answered, an' I were as you, I would never come in bed. Bacon's Apophth.

Our grandchildren will see a few rays hung up in Westminsterhall, which cost an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arrears, and boast that their grandfathers were rich and great.

GRANDFICK. adj. [grandis and facio, Latin.] Making great.

GRANDINOUS. adj. [grandis, Latin.] Full of hail; consisting of hail.

GRANDITY. n. f. [from grandis, Latin.] Greatness; grandeur; magnificence. An old word.

Our poets excel in grandity and gravity, smoothness and property, in quickness and briefness.

GRANDMOTHER. n. f. [grand and mother.] The father's or mother's mother.

Thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice. 1 Tim. i. 5.

GRANDSIRE. n. f. [grand and sire.]

1. Grandfather.

Think'st thou, that I will leave my kingly throne,

Wherein my grandsire and my father sat? Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Thy grandsire, and his brother, to whom fame

Gave, from two conquer'd parts o' th' world, their name.

The wreaths his grandsire knew to reap

By active toil and military sweat. Prior.

2. Any ancestor, poetically.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,

Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster? Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Above the portal, carv'd in cedar wood,

So mimic ancient wits at best,

As apes our grandsires in their doublets dress. Pope.

GRANDSON. n. f. [grand and son.] The son of a son or daughter.

Almighty Jove augment your wealthy rore,

Give much to you, and to his grandsons more. Dryden.

Grandfathers in private families are not much observed to have great influence on their grandsons, and, I believe, they have much less among princes.

GRANGE. n. f. [grange, French.] A farm: generally a farm with a house at a distance from neighbours.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it; and, to draw buyers, proclaimed the virtues of it: nothing ever thrived on it, faith he; the trees were all blasted, the swine died of the measles, the cattle of the murrain, and the sheep of the rot; nothing was ever reared there, not a duckling or a goose. Ben. Jonson's Dilect.

At the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana. Shakespeare.

The loose unletter'd hinds,

When for their teeming flocks and granges full

In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan. Milton.

If the church was of their own foundation, they might chuse, the incumbent being once dead, whether they would put any other therein; unless, perhaps, the said church had people belonging to it; for then they must still maintain a curate: and of this sort were their granges and priories. Ayliffe.

GRANITE. n. f. [granit, Fr. from granum, Lat. because consisting as it were of grains, or small distinct particles.] A stone composed of separate and very large concretions, rudely com-packed together; of great hardness, giving fire with steel; not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcinable in a great fire. The hard white granite with black spots, commonly called moor-stone, forms a very firm, and though rude, yet beautifully variegated mass. It is found in immense strata in Ireland, but not used there. In Cornwall and the adjacent counties it is found on the surface of the earth in prodigious masses, and brought in great quantities to London, where it is used for the steps of public buildings. Hard red granite, variegated with black and white, now called oriental granite, is valuable for its extreme hardness and beauty, and capable of a most elegant polish. It is common in Egypt and Arabia, and

GRA

and is also found in the West of England little inferior. The vulgar opinion of their being cast out of various fragments of marble, because they appear composed of particles or granules of different colours, is easily confuted by an accurate inspection of the structure and formation of those granules, the least and meanest of which no human art could ever compose, nor fire leave in the state in which we see them. A third sort of granite has a beautiful variegation of colours, red, white, black and yellow, and capable of an elegant polish: it is little inferior in beauty to the oriental granite, and there are immenso strata of it in Minorca. Detached nodules of it, two or three foot in circumference, are also frequent on the shores of Guernsey, from whence it is brought as ballast, and used in paving our streets. Hill on Effigy.

Alabaster, marble of divers colours, both simple and mixed, the opulents, porphyry, and the granite. Woodward.

There are still great pillars of granite, and other fragments of this ancient temple. Addison on Italy.

GRANIVOROUS. adj. [granum and voro, Lat.] Eating grain;

living upon grain.

Granivorous birds, as a crane, upon the first peck of their bill, can distinguish the qualities of hard bodies, which the sense of men discerns not without mastication. Brown.

Panick affords a soft demulcent nourishment, both for gran-ivorous birds and mankind. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GRANNAM. n. f. [for grandam.] Grandmother. Only used in burlesque works.

Oh my kind granmam told me, Tim, take warning. Cay.

To GRAN. v. a. [from granit, French, Junius and Skinner; perhaps, as Aldrich thinks, from granit, or rather from grata or gratific.]

1. To admit that which is not yet proved; to allow; to yield; to concede.

They gather out of Scripture general rules to be followed in making laws; and so, in effect, they plainly grant, that we ourselves may lawfully make laws for the church. Hecker.

Grant that the fates have firm'd, by their decree,

The Trojan race to reign in Italy. Dryden's Æn. b. vii.

Suppose, which yet I grant not, thy desire

A moment elder than my rival fire,

Can chance of seeing first thy title prove? Dryden.

If he be one indifferent as to the present rebellion, they may take it for granted his complaint is the rage of a disappointed man. Addison's Freeholder.

2. To bestow something which cannot be claimed of right.

The God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him. 1 Sam. xvii.

Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life. Acts xiii. 18.

Didst thou not kill this king?

—I grant ye.

—Do'st grant me, hedgehog? Then God grant me too,

Thou may'st be damned for that wicked deed. Shak. R. III.

He heard, and granted half his prayer;

The rest the winds dispers'd. Pope.

GRANT. v. a. [from the verb.]

1. The act of granting or bestowing.

2. The thing granted; a gift; a boon.

Couriers juggle for a grant,

And when they break their friendship plead their want. Dry.

3. [In law.] A gift in writing of such a thing as cannot aptly be passed or conveyed by word only; as rent, reversions, fervices, advowsons in gross, common in gross, tithes, &c. or made by such persons as cannot give but by deed, as the king, and all bodies politic; which differences be often in speech neglected, and then is taken generally for every gift whatsoever, made of any thing by any person; and he that granteth it is named the grantor, and he to whom it is made the grantee. A thing is said to be in grant which cannot be assigned without deed. Cruil.

All the whole land is the queen's, unless there be some grant of any part thereof, to be shewed from her majesty.

4. Concession; admission of something in dispute.

But of this so large a grant, we are content not to take advantage. Hooker, b. iii. f. 11.

This grant destroys all you have urg'd before. Dryden.

GRANTABLE. adj. [from grant.] That which may be granted.

The office of the bishop's chancellor was grantable for life. Ayliffe's Parergon.

GRANTEE. n. f. [from grant.] He to whom any grant is

GRA

- Fresh from his fall, and fierce grapple join'd, Throttled at length in th' air, expir'd and fell. Milton.
Or did his genius
Know mine the stronger demon, fear'd the grapple,
And, looking round him, found this nook of fate,
To skulk behind my sword. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
2. Close fight.
In the grapple I boarded them; on the infant they got clear of our ship, to alone became their prisoner. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
3. Iron instrument by which one ship fastens on another.
But Cymon soon his crooked grapples cast,
Which with tenacious hold his foes embrac'd. Dryden.
GRAPPEMENT. n. f. [from grapple.] Close fight; hostile embrace.
They catching hold of him, as down he lent,
Him backward overthrew, and down him stay'd
With their rude hands and grievous grapplement. Fairy Queen.
GRASSHOPPER. n. f. [grass and hop.] A small insect that hops in the summer grass. The cicada of the Latins, or cicala of the Italians, is often by the poets translated grasshopper, but improperly.
Her waggon spokes made of long spinners legs,
The cover of the wings of grasshoppers. Shakspeare's As You Like It.
Grasshoppers eat up the green of whole countries. Bacon.
Where silver lakes, with verdant shadows crown'd,
Disperse a grateful chillness all around;
The grasshopper avoids the untainted air,
Nor in the midst of summer ventures there. Addison.
The women were of such an enormous stature, that we appeared as grasshoppers before them. Addison's Spectator.
GRASSHOPPER. See GRAZIER.
TO GRASP. v. a. [graspere, Italian.]
1. To hold in the hand; to gripe.
O fool that I am, that thought I could grasp water and bind the wind. Sidney, b. ii.
In his right hand
Grasping ten thousand thunders, which he sent Before him, such as in their souls infix'd Plagues.
Kings, by grasping more than they could hold,
First made their subjects, by oppression, bold. Denham.
Doom, as they please, my empire not to stand,
I'll grasp my sceptre with my dying hand. Dryden's Ind. Emp.
2. To seize; to catch at.
This grasping of the militia of the kingdom into their own hands, was desired the summer before. Clarendon.
TO GRASP. v. n.
1. To catch; to endeavour to seize; to try at.
So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less. Swift.
2. To struggle; to strive; to grapple. Not now in use.
See, his face is black and full of blood;
His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasps
And tugs'd for life. Shakspeare's Henry VI. p. ii.
3. To gripe; to encroach.
Like a miser 'midst his store,
Who grasps and grasps till he can hold no more. Dryden.
GRASP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The gripe or seizure of the hand.
Nor wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both spear and shield. Milton's Paradise Lost.
This hand and sword have been acquainted well;
It should have come before into my grasp,
To kill the ravisher. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
The left arm is a little defaced, though one may see it held something in its grasp formerly. Addison on Italy.
2. Possession; hold.
I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole face that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
3. Power of seizing.
Within the direful grasp
Of savage hunger, or of savage heat. Milton.
They looked upon it as their own, and had it even within their grasp. Clarendon, b. viii.
GRASP. n. f. [from grasp.] One that grasps, seizes, or catches at.
GRASS. n. f. [grax, Saxon.] The common herbage of the field on which cattle feed; an herb with long narrow leaves.
Ye are grown fat as the heifer at grass, and bellow as bells. Jer. l. 11.
The trade of beef for foreign exportation was prejudiced, and almost sunk; for the flesh being young, and only grass fed, was thin, light and moist, and not of a substance to endure the salt, or be preserved by it, for long voyages, or a slow consumption. Temple.
You'll be no more your former you;
But for a blooming nymph will pass,
Just fifteen, coming summer's grass. Swift.
GRASS of Parnassus. n. f. [parnassia, Latin.]

GRA

- It hath a rose-shaped flower of five large leaves, and five small at the bottom fringed, of a greenish colour, and planted orbicularly: out of the flower-cup arises the point, which turns to an oval membranaceous fruit, having but one cell filled with seeds. This plant grows wild in most meadows, particularly in the North. It is called parnassia from mount Parnassus, where it was supposed to grow; and because the cattle feed on it, it obtained the name of grass, though the plant has no resemblance to the grass kind. A. Miller.
TO GRASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed grass; to become pasture.
Land arable, driven, or worn to the proof,
With oats ye may sow it, the sooner to grass,
More soon to be pasture, to bring it to past. Tull, Unaband.
GRASS-PLANT. n. f. [grass and plant.] A small level covered with short grass.
Here on this grass-plot, in this very place,
Come and sport. Shakspeare's Tempest.
The part of your garden next your house should be a gras- terre for flowers, or grass-plot bordered with flowers. Temple.
They are much valued by our modern planters, to adorn their walks and grass-plots. Mortimer's Husbandry.
GRASS-POLY. A species of WILLOW-WORT, which see.
GRASSINESS. n. f. [from grass.] The state of abounding in grass.
GRASSY. adj. [from grass.] Covered with grass; abounding with grass.
Ne did he leave the mountains bare unfeen,
Nor the rank grassy fens delights untry'd. Spenser.
Rais'd of grassy turf
Their table was, and mossy seats had round. Milt. P. Lost.
The most in fields, like herded beasts, lie down,
To dews obnoxious, on the grassy floor. Dryden's Ann. Mir.
GRATE. n. f. [grates, Latin.]
1. A partition made with bars placed near to one another, or crossing each other: such as are in cloysters or prisons.
I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, and your couch-fellow, Nim; or else you had look'd through the grates, like a gemmy of baboons. Shakspeare.
Out at a little grate his eyes he cast
Upon those bordering hills, and open plain. Daniel's C. W.
A fan has on it a nursery of lively black-eyed vasa,
who are endeavouring to creep out at the grates. Addison.
2. The range of bars within which fires are made.
My dear is of opinion that an old fashioned grate consumes coals, but gives no heat. Spectator, No. 30.
TO GRATE. v. a. [grater, French.]
1. To rub hard so as to injure or offend; to offend, as by oppression or importunity.
Thereat the fiend his gnashing teeth did grate. Fa. 2.
Blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated.
I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, and your couch-fellow, Nim; or else you had look'd
through the grates, like a gemmy of baboons. Shakspeare.
Out at a little grate his eyes he cast
Upon those bordering hills, and open plain. Daniel's C. W.
A fan has on it a nursery of lively black-eyed vasa,
who are endeavouring to creep out at the grates. Addison.
2. To offend by anything that is harsh or vexatious.
Thereat enraged, soon he 'gan upstart,
Grinding his teeth and grating his great heart. Hubb. Tel.
They have been partial in the gospel, culled and chosen out those softer and more gentle dictates which should less grate and disturb them. Decay of Piety.
Just resentment and hard usage coin'd
Th' unwilling word; and, grating as it is,
Take it, for it is thy due. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
This habit of writing and discouraging, wherein I unfortunately differ from almost the whole kingdom, and am apt to grate the ears of more than I could wish, was acquired during my apprenticeship in London. Swift.
3. To form a sound by collision of asperities or hard bodies.
The grating flock of wrathful iron arms. Shakspeare's R. II.
On a sudden open fly,
With impetuous recoil and jarring found,
Th' infernal doors, and on their hinges grate
Harsh thunder, that the lowest bottom shook Of Erebus. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. ii.
TO GRATE. v. n.
1. To rub hard so as to injure or offend; to offend, as by oppression or importunity.
Wherein have you been galled by the king?
What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on you,
That you should feel this lawless bloody book
Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine? Shakspeare's Henry IV.
I have grated upon my good friends for three reprieves for you, or else you had looked through the grates. Shakspeare.
Paradoxing is of great use; but the faculty must be to cen-derly managed as not to grate upon the truth and reason of things. L'Estrange's Fables.
This grated harder upon, and raised greater tumults and boilings in the hearts of men, than the seeming unreasonableness of former articles. South's Sermons.
I never

GRA

- I never heard him make the least complaint, in a case that would have grated sorely on some men's patience, and have filled their lives with discontent. Locke.
2. To make a harsh noise, as that of a rough body drawn over another.
We are not so nice as to cast away a sharp knife, because the edge of it may sometimes grate. Hesler, b. v. f. 36.
GRATEFUL. adj. [gratus, Latin.]
1. Having a due sense of benefits; willing to acknowledge and to repay benefits.
A grateful mind
By owing owes not, but still pays. Milton.
From grateful souls exact reward at last. Dryden's Fables.
2. Pleading; acceptable; delightful; delicious.
Whatever is ingrate at first, is made grateful by custom;
but whatsoever is too pleasing at first, groweth quickly to fatigue. Bacon's Natural History.
Now golden fruits on loaded branches shine,
And grateful clusters swell with floods of wine. Pope.
GRATEFULLY. adv. [from grateful.]
1. With willingness to acknowledge and repay benefits; with due sense of obligation.
He, as new wak'd, thus gratefully reply'd. Milton.
Enough remains for household charge beside,
His wife and tender children to sustain,
And gratefully to feed his dumb deaving train. Dryden's Virg.
In Cyprus long by men and gods obey'd,
The lovers till the gratefully repaid. Graville.
2. In a pleasing manner.
Study detains the mind by the perpetual occurrence of something new, which may gratefully strike the imagination. Watts.
GRATEFULNESS. n. f. [from grateful.]
1. Gratitude; duty to benefactors. Now obsolete.
A Lacedaemon knight, having sometime served him with more gratefulness than good courage defended him. Sidney.
Blessings beforehand, ties of gratefulness,
The found of glory ringing in our ears. Herbert.
2. Quality of being acceptable; pleasantness.
GRATER. n. f. [grator, Fr. from grate.] A kind of coarse file with which soft bodies are rubbed to powder.
GRATIFICATION. n. f. [gratificatio, Latin.]
1. The act of pleasing.
They are incapable of any design above the present grati- fication of their palates. South's Sermons.
2. Pleasure; delight.
How hardly is his will brought to change all its desires and aversions, and to renounce those gratifications in which he has been long us'd to place his happiness? Rogers's Sermons.
3. Reward; recompence. A low word.
TO GRATIFY. v. a. [gratifico, Latin.]

You steer between the country and the court,
Nor gratify, whatever the great desire,
Nor grudging give what publick needs require. Dryden.
2. To delight; to please.
But pride food ready to prevent the blow;
For who would die to gratify a foe? Dryden's Fables.
The captive generals to his car are ty'd;
The joyful citizens tumultuous tide
Echoing his glory, gratify his pride. Prior.
A palled appetite is humorous, and must be gratified with fancies rather than food. Talier, No. 54.
At once they gratify their scent and taste,
While frequent cups prolong the rich repast.
A thousand little impertinencies are very gratifying to curiosity, though not improving to the understanding. Addison.
3. To requite with a gratification: as, I'll gratify you for this trouble.
GRATINGLY. adv. [from grate.] Harshly; offensively.
GRATIS. [Latin.] For nothing; without a recompence.
The people cry you mock'd them; and, of late,
When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd. Shakspeare.
They sold themselves; but thou, like a kind fellow, gav'st thyself away gratis, and I thank thee for thee. Shakspeare.
Kindred are no welcome clients, where relation gives them a title to have advice gratis.
I scorn'd to take my degree at Utrecht or Leyden, though offer'd it gratis by those universities. Arbutnot's John Bull.
GRATITUDE. n. f. [gratitudo, low Latin.]
1. Duty to benefactors.
Forbid
That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude
Tow'rs her deserving children is enroll'd,
Should now eat up her own! Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
2. Desire to return benefits.
The debt immenses of endless gratitude. Milton.
Gratitude is properly a virtue, disposing the mind to an inward sense and an outward acknowledgment of a benefit received, together with a readiness to return the same, or the like. South's Sermons.

GRA

- GRATUITOUS. adj. [gratuitus, Latin; gratuit, Fr.]
1. Voluntary; granted without claim or merit.
We mistake the gratuitous blessings of heaven for the fruits of our own industry. L'Estrange.
2. Affected without proof.
The second motive they had to introduce this gratuitous
declination of atoms, the same poet gives us. Roy.
GRATUITOUSLY. adv. [from gratuitous.]
1. Without claim or merit.
2. Without proof.
I would know whence came this obliquity of direction, which they gratuitously lack to matter: this is to ascribe will and choice to these particles. Chene's Phil. Prin.
GRATUITY. n. f. [gratuité, Fr. from gratuitous.] A present or acknowledgment; a free gift.
They might have pretended to comply with Ulysses, and dismissed him with a small gratuity. Notes on the Odyssey.
He used every year to present us with his almanack, upon the score of some little gratuity we gave him. Swift.
TO GRATULATE. v. a. [gratulari, Latin.]
1. To congratulate; to salute with declarations of joy.
To gratify the good Andronicus,
And gratulate his safe return to Rome.
The people will accept whom he admires. Shakspeare's Tit. Andr.
Whither away for fast?
—No farther than the Tower,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakspeare's Rich. III.
Since nature could behold so dire a crime,
I gratulate at least my native clime,
That such a land, which such a monster bore,
So far is distant from our Thracian shore. Dryden's Fables.
2. To declare joy for.
Yet give thy jealous subjects leave to doubt,
Who this thy 'scape from rumour gratulate,
No less than if from peril; and devout,
Do beg thy care unto thy after state. Ben. Jonson's Epigrams.
GRATULATION. n. f. [from gratulari, Latin.] Salutations made by expressing joy; expression of joy.
They are the first gratulations wherewith our Lord and Saviour was joyfully received at his entrance into the world, by such as in their hearts, arms, and bowels embraced him. Hook.
The earth
Gave signs of gratulation, and each hill. Psalm. Par. Lost.
Your enjoyments, according to the standard of a Christian duty, are so complete that they require no addition: I shall turn my wishes into gratulations, and, congratulating their ful-ness, only wish their continuance. South.
GRATULATORY. adj. [from gratulate.] Congratulatory, expressing congratulation.
GRAVE. a final syllable in the names of places, is from the Saxon græp, a grove or cave. Gibson's Camden.
GRAVE. n. f. [græp, Saxon.] The place in the ground in which the dead are repositied.
Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his spright,
In the church-way paths to glide. Shakspeare.
Thou wilt not leave me in the loathsome grave. Milton.
To walk upon the graves of our dead masters,
Is our own security. Denham's Sophy.
A flood of waters would overwhelm all those fragments which the earth broke into, and bury in one common grave
all mankind, and all the inhabitants of the earth. Burnet.
GRAVE-CLOATHS. n. f. [grave and cloaths.] The drefs of the dead.
But of such subtle substance and unbound,
That like a ghost he seem'd, whose grave-cloaths were unbound. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. xi.
And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-cloaths. Job. xi. 44.
GRAVE-STONE. n. f. [grave and stone.] The stone that is laid over the grave; the monumental stone.

GRA

The graves can and ought to imitate the bodies of the colours by the degrees of the lights and shadows: 'tis impossible to give much strength to what they grave, after the works of the schools, without imitating in some sort the colour of the objects.

4. [From grave.] To entomb. Not in use.

There's more gold:

Do you damn others, and let this damn you:

And ditches grave you all! Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

5. To clean, caulk, and sheath a ship.

To GRAVE, v. n. To write or delineate on hard substances.

Thou shalt make a plate of pure gold, and grave upon it.

GRAVE, adj. [grave, French; gravis, Latin.]

1. Solemn; serious; sober; not gay; not light or trifling.

To th' more mature,

A glass that feat'd them; and to the grave,

A child that guided dotards. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

We should have else desir'd

Your good advice, which still hath been both grave

And prosperous, in this day's council. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

That grave awfulness, as in your best breed of maffive, or elegancy and prettiness, as in your lesser dogs, are modes of beauty. More's Antidote against Atheism.

Even the grave and serious characters are distinguished by their several sorts of gravity. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

Youth on silent wings is flown;

Graver years come rolling on. Prior.

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grave;

And to be grave, exceeds all pow'r of face. Pope's Epistles.

Folly-painting humours, grave himself,

Calls laughter forth. Thomson's Winter.

2. Of weight; not futile; credible. Little used.

The Roman state was of all others the most celebrated for their virtue, as the grave of their own writers, and of strangers, do bear them witness. Gray's Confess. Sac. b. iii. c. 3.

4. Not showy; not tawdry; as, a grave suit of cloaths.

Accent, in the Greek names and usage, seems to have regarded the tone of the voice; the acute accent raising the voice, in some certain syllables, to a higher, i. e. more acute pitch or tone, and the grave depressing it lower, and both having some emphasis, i. e. more vigorous pronunciation.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

GRAVEL, n. f. [gravier, French; gravel, Dutch; gravel,

1. Hard sand; sand consisting of very small pebblestones.

Gravel consists of flints of all the usual sizes and colours, of the several sorts of pebbles; sometimes with a few pyrites, and other mineral bodies, confusedly intermixed, and common fund. Wadward's Med. Pess.

His armour, all gilt, was so well handled, that it shew'd like a glittering sand and gravel, interlaced with silver rivers. Shelton.

By intelligence,

And proofs as clear as founts in July, when

We see each grain of gravel. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Providence permitted not the strength of the earth to spend itself in base gravel and pebbles, instead of quarries of stones.

More's Antidote against Atheism.

So deep, and yet so clear, we might behold

The gravel bottom, and that bottom gold. Dryden.

The upper garden at Kensington was at first nothing but a gravel pit. Spektor, N. 477.

Gravel walks are best for fruit-trees. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. [Gravelle, French.] Sandy matter concreted in the kidneys.

If the stone is brittle it will often crumble, and pass in the form of gravel: if the stone is too big to pass, the best method is to come to a sort of a composition or truce with it. Arbutnot.

To GRAVEL, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pave or cover with gravel.

Moss groweth upon alleys, especially such as lie cold, and upon the North, as in divers terraces; and again, if they be much trodden, or if they were at the first gravelled. Bacon.

2. To stick in the sand.

William the Conqueror, when he invaded this island, chanced at his arrival to be gravelled; and one of his feet stuck so fast in the sand, that he fell to the ground. Camden.

3. To puzzle; to stop; to put to a stand; to embarrass.

I would kiss before I spoke.

—Nay, you were better speak first, and when you were gravel- led for lack of matter you might take occasion to kiss. Shak.

The disease itself will gravel him to judge of it; nor can there be any prediction made of it, it is so sharp. Hewel.

What work do our imaginations make with eternity and immensity? And how are we gravelled by their cutting dilemmas? Glanv. Scip. c. 13.

Mat, who was here a little gravelled.

—Toft up his nose, and would have cavill'd. Prior.

4. [In horsemanship.] To throw the foot with gravel confined by the shoe.

GRAVELESS, adj. [from grave.] Without a tomb; unburied.

GRA

By degrees the memory of my womb,
Together with my brave Egyptians all,
By the discarding of this pelleted storm,
Lie gravelly.

GRAVELLY, adj. [gravelleux, French, from gravel.] Full of gravel; abounding with gravel; consisting of gravel.

There are some natural spring-waters that will infiltrate wood; so that you shall see one piece of wood, whereof the part above the water shall continue wood, and the part under the water shall be turned into a gravelly stone. Bacon's N. Hist.

If you live in a consumptive air, make choice of the more open, high, dry, and gravelly part of it. Harvey on Consumption.

GRAVELY, adv. [from grave.]

1. Solemnly; seriously; soberly; without lightness or mirth.

Thou stand'st

Gravelly in doubt when to hold them wife. Milton.

A girl longs to tell her confidant that she hopes to be married in a little time, and asks her very gravelly what she would have her to do. Spektor, N. 473.

Wisdom's above suspecting wiles;

The queen of learning gravelly smiles. Swift.

A formal story was very gravelly carried to his excellency,

by some zealous members. Swift.

2. Without gaudiness or show.

GRAVENS. n. f. [from grave.] Seriousness; solemnity and sobriety of behaviour.

You no less becomes

The light and careless livery that it wears,

Than settled age his fables, and his weeds

Importing health and graveness. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

But yet beware of counsels when too full;

Number makes long disputes and graveness dull. Deane.

GRAVEMENT, adj. [gravelens, Lat.] Strong scented. Dist.

GRAVER, n. f. [graver, French, from grave.]

1. One whose business is to inscribe or carve upon hard substances; one who copies pictures upon wood or metal to be impressed on paper.

If he makes a design to be graved, he is to remember that the graver disposes not their colours as the painters do; and that, by consequence, he must take occasion to find the relief of his design in the natural shadows of the figures, which he has disposed to cause the effect. Dryden's Disfranch.

2. The file or tool used in graving.

With all the care wherewith I tried upon it the known ways of softening gravers, I could not soften this. Leigh.

The toilsome hours in different labour slide,

Some work the file, and some the graver guide. Gay's Fat.

GRAVITY, n. f. [gravitas, Latin.] Pregnancy; state of being with child.

Women, obstructed, have not always the forementioned symptoms: in those the signs of gravity and obstructions are hard to be distinguished in the beginning. Arbutnot on Diet.

GRAVING, n. f. [from grave.] Carved work.

Skilful to work in gold; also to grave any manner of gravings, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chron. ii. 14.

To GRAVITATE, v. n. [from gravis, Latin.] To tend to the center of attraction.

Those who have nature's steps with care pursued,

That matter is with active force endu'd,

That all its parts magnetick pow'r exert,

And to each other gravitate, assist. Blackmer's Creation.

That subtle matter must be of the same substance with all other matter, and as much as is comprehended within a particular body must gravitate jointly with that body. Bentley.

GRAVITATION, n. f. [from gravitate.] Act of tending to the centre.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, whereby all known bodies, in the vicinity of the earth, do tend and press towards its centre. Bentley's Sermon.

When the loose mountain trembles from on high,

Shall gravitation cease, if you go by? Pope's Essay on Man.

GRAVITY, n. f. [gravitas, Latin; gravis, French.]

1. Weight; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

That quality by which all heavy bodies tend towards the centre of the earth, accelerating their motion the nearer they approach towards it, true philosophy has shewn to be unavailable by any hypothesis, and resolved it into the immediate will of the Creator. Of all bodies, considered within the confines of any fluid, there is a twofold gravity, true and absolute, and apparent, vulgar or comparative: absolute gravity is the whole force by which any body tends downwards; but the relative or vulgar is the excess of gravity in one body above the specific gravity of the fluid, whereby it tends downwards more than the ambient fluid doth. Quincy.

Bodies do swim or sink in different liquors, according to the tenuity or gravity of those liquors which are to support them. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 11.

Though this increase of density may at great distances be exceeding slow, yet if the elastic tone of this medium be exceeding great, it may suffice to impel bodies from the denser parts.

GRA

parts of the medium towards the rarer, with all that power which we call gravity. Newton's Opt.

2. Atrociousness; weight of guilt.

No man could ever have thought this reasonable, that had intended thereby only to punish the injury committed, according to the gravity of the fact. Hesker, b. i. f. 10.

3. Seriousness; solemnity.

There is not a white hair on your face but should have his effect of gravity. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

Our youths and wildness shall no whit appear,

But all be buried in his gravity. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

For the advocates and council that plead, patience and gravi- ty of hearing is an essential part of justice. Bacon, Essay 57.

Great Cato there, for gravity renown'd. Dryden's Ann.

The emperors often jested on their rivals or predecessors, but their mints still maintained their gravity. Addison.

GRA'VY, n. f. The ferous juice that runs from flesh not much dried by the fire.

They usually boil and roast their meat until it falls almost off from the bones; but we love it half raw, with the blood trickling down from it, delicately terming it the gravy, which in truth looks more like an ichorous or raw bloody matter.

Harvey on Consumption.

There may be a stronger broth made of vegetables than of any gravy soup. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GRAY, adj. [gray, Saxon; grau, Danish; grau, Dutch.]

1. White with a mixture of black.

They left me then, when the gray headed even,

Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed,

Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain. Milton.

These gray and dun colours may be also produced by mixing whites and blacks, and by consequence differ from perfect whites; not in species of colours, but only in degree of lumi-nousness. Newton's Opt.

2. White or hoary with old age.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to gray; as is seen in men, though some earlier and some later; in horses, that are dappled and turn white; in old quintals that turn grilly, and many others. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Thou hast neither forsaken me now I am become gray headed, nor suffered me to forsake thee in the late days of temptation. Walton's Life of Bishop Sanderson.

Anon

Gray headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd.

Assemble. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

The restoration of gray hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected. Glanv. Scip.

Gray headed infant! and in vain grown old!

Art thou to learn that in another's gold

Lie charms resistless? Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 13.

We most of us are grown gray headed in our dear master's service. Addison's Spectator, N. 517.

Her gray hair'd synods damning books unread,

And Bacon trembling for his brazen head. Pope's Dunciad.

3. Dark like the opening or close of day; of the colour of ashes.

Thou hast spoken of thy servants house for a great while to come. 2 Sa. vii. 19.
4. Important; weighty.
Many
Have broke their backs with laying manors on them,
For this great journey. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
And though this be a great truth, if it be impartially considered, yet it is also a great paradox to men of corrupt minds and various practices. Tillotson's Sermon 6.
5. Chief; principal.
Hear the king's pleasure, cardinal, who commands you
To render up the great seal presently. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
6. Of high rank; of large power.
Such men as he be never at heart's ease,
Whilst they behold a greater than themselves. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Of all the great, how few
Are just to heaven, and to their promise true! Pope's Odyssey.
Misfortune made the throne her seat,
And none could be unhappy but the great. Rowe.
Despise the farce of state,
The sober follies of the wife and great. Pope.
7. Illustrious; eminent.
O Lord, thou art great, and thy name is great in might. Jer. x. 6.
8. Grand of aspect; of elevated mien.
Such Dido was; with such becoming state,
Amidst the crowd, she walks serenely great. Dryden's Virgil.
9. Noble; magnanimous.
In her every thing was goodly and stately; yet so, that it might seem that great mindedness was but the ancient-bearer to the humbleness. Sidney.
10. Swelling; proud.
Solyman perceived that Vienna was not to be won with words, nor the defendants to be discouraged with great looks; wherefore he began to batter the walls. Kneller.
11. Familiar; much acquainted. A low word.
Those that would not censure, or speak ill of a man immediately, will talk more boldly of those that are great with them, and thereby wound their honour. Bacon's Essay 49.
12. Pregnant; teeming.
Their bellies great
With swelling vanity, bring forth deceit. Sandys.
This fly, for most he stings in heat of day,
From cattle great with young keep thou away. May's Virg.
13. It is added in every step of ascending or descending consanguinity: as great grandson is the son of my grandson.
I dare not yet affirm for the antiquity of our language, that our great-great-grandfathers tongue came out of Persia. Candem's Remains.
What we call great-great grandfather they called forth-father. Candem's Remains.
Their holiday-cloaths go from father to son, and are seldom worn out 'till the second or third generation; so that 'tis common enough to see a countryman in the doublet and breeches of his great-grandfather. Addison.
14. Hard; difficult; grievous. A proverbial expression.
It is no great matter to live lovingly with good natured and meek persons. Taylor's Devotion.
- GREAT. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. The whole; the gross; the whole in a lump.
To let out thy harvest by great or by day,
Let this by experience lead thee the way:
By great will deceive thee with ling'ring it out,
By day will dispatch. Tusser's Husbandry for August.
It were behoveful, for the strength of the navy, that no ships should be builded by the great; for by daily experience they are found to be weak and imperfect. Raleigh's Essays.
He did at length so many plain forget,
And lost the tale, and took them by the great. Dryden.
Carpenters, for uniformity, generally make them so, unless they build an house by the great, and are agreed for the sum of money. Moxon's Mech. Exer.
I see aside one day in a week for lovers, and interpret by the great for any gentleman who is turned of sixty. Addison.
- GRE'ATBELLED. adj. [great and belly.] Pregnant; teeming.
Greatbelled women,
That had not half a week to go, like rams
In the old time of war, would shake the prels,
And make 'em reel from before 'em. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
A greatbelled woman, walking through the city in the day-time, had her child struck out of her womb, and carried half a furlong from her. Wilkins's Matb. Magic.
- TO GRE'ATEN. v. a. [from great.] To aggrandize; to enlarge; to magnify. A word little used.
After they fought to greater themselves in Italy itself, using strangers for the commanders of their armies, the Turks by degrees beat them out of all their goodly countries. Raleigh.
- GRE'ATHARTED. adj. [great and heart.] High spirited; undaunted.
The earl, as greathearted as he, declared that he neither cared for his friendship, nor feared his hatred. Clarendon.

GRE

- GRE'ATLY. adj. [from great.]

Yet London, empress of the northern clime,
By an high fate thou greatly dost expire. Dryden's Ann. Mir.
3. Magnanimously; generously; bravely.
Where are these bold intrepid sons of war,
That greatly turn their backs upon the foe,
And to their general send a brave defiance? Addison's Cat.
- GRE'ATNESS. n. f. [from great.]
1. Largeness of quantity or number.
2. Comparative quantity.
We can have no positive idea of any space or duration, which is not made up of and commensurate to repeated numbers of feet or yards, or days or years, and whereby we judge of the greatness of these sort of quantities. Lake.
All absent good does not, according to the greatness it has, or is acknowledged to have, cause pain equal to that greatness, as all pain causes desire equal to itself; because the absence of good is not always a pain, as the presence of pain is. Lake.
3. High degree of any quality.
Zeal, in duties, should be proportioned to the greatness of the reward, and the certainty. Rogers's Sermon 13.
4. High place; dignity; power; influence; empire.
Farewell, a long farewell to all my greatness. Shakespeare.
So many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
I beg your greatness not to give the law
In other realms; but, beaten, to withdraw. Dryden's En.
Approaching greatness met him with her charms
Of pow'r and future state;
He shook her from his arms. Dryden.
Themistocles raised the Athenians to their greatness at sea, which he thought to be the true and constant interest of that commonwealth. Swift.

Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will,
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill. Dryden.
While the reaper fills his greedy hands,
And binds the golden sheaves in brittle bands. Dryden's Virg.
- GREEN. adj. [græw, German; green, Dutch.]
1. Having a colour formed commonly by compounding blue and yellow; of the colour of the leaves of trees or herbs. The green colour is said to be most favourable to the fight. The general colour of plants is green, which is a colour that no flower is of: there is a greenish primrose, but it is pale, and scarce a green. Bacon's Natural History.
Groves for ever green.
2. Pale; sickly: from whence we call the maid's disease, the green sickness, or chlorosis. Like it is Sappho's $\chi\lambda\omicron\rho\omicron\varsigma\iota\sigma\iota\varsigma$ $\pi\omicron\iota\alpha\varsigma$. Pope.
Was the hope drunk
Wherein you dress'd yourself? Hath it slept since?
And wakes it now to look for green and pale
At what it did so freely? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
There's never any of these demure boys come to any proof: they fall into a kind of male green sickness. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
'Till the green sickness and love's force betray'd
To death's remorseless arms th' unhappy maid. Garth.
3. Flourishing; fresh; undecayed: from trees in Spring.
4. New; fresh: as, a green wound.
The door is open, fir; there lies your way:
You may be jogging while your boots are green. Shakespeare.
Greifs are green;
And all thy friends, which thou must make thy friends,
Have but their flings and teeth newly ta'en out. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
In a vault,
Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,
Lies festering in his blood. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
A man that studiously keeps his own wounds green, which otherwise would heal and do well. Bacon's Essay 4.
5. Not dry.
If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts; must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are of themselves as dry fuel, apt beforehand unto tumults? Hooker's Dedication.
Of fragility the cause is an impotency to be extended, and therefore stone is more fragile than metal, and so dry wood is more fragile than green. Bacon's Natural History.
If you but consider a piece of green wood burning in a chimney, you will readily discern, in the disbanded parts of it, the four elements. Boyle.
The green do often heat the ripe, and the ripe, so heated, give fire to the green. Mortimer's Husbandry.
6. Not roasted; half raw.
Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far-fetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say the meat is green, when it is half roasted. Watts's Logic.
7. Unripe; immature; young; because fruits are green before they are ripe.
My fallad days,
When I was green in judgment, cold in blood! Shakespeare.
O charming youth, in the first op'ning page;
So many graces in fo green an age. Dryden.
You'll find a difference
Between the promise of his greener days,
And these he matters now. Shakespeare's Henry V.
If you would fast green geese, shut them up when they are about a month old. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Stubble-geese at Michaelmas are seen
Upon the spit, next May produces green. King's Cookery.

GRE

After break their fast
On greenward ground, a cool and grateful taste. Dryden.
In shallow foils all is gravel within a few inches; and sometimes in low ground a thin greenward, and sloughy underneath; which last turns all into bog. Swift.
GREENWEED. n. f. [green and weed] Dyers weed.
GREENWOOD. n. f. [green and wood] A wood confidered as it appears in the Spring or Summer. It is sometimes used as one word.

Among wild herbs under the greenwood shade. Fairfax.
It happen'd on a Summer's holiday,
That to the greenwood shade he took his way;
For Cymon thunn'd the church. Dryden's Cymon and Iphigenia.

To GREET. v. a. [grator, Latin; græcan, Saxon.]

1. To address at meeting.
I think if men, which in these places live,
Durst look in themselves, and themselves retrieve,
They would like strangers greet themselves. Donne.
I would gladly go,
To greet my Pallas with such news below. Dryden's Æn.
2. To address in whatever manner.

My noble partner
You greet with present grace, and great prediction;
To me you speak not. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,
And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,
My body shall make good. Shakespeare's Richard II.

3. To salute in kindness or respect.
My lord, the mayor of London comes to greet you.
—God bless your grace with health and happy days. Shakespeare.
Now the herald lark

Left his ground nest, high towing to defy
The morn's approach, and greet her with his song. Milton.
Once had the early matrons run
To greet her of a lovely son. Milton.

The greet of our own; and now all nations greet,
With bending fails, each vessel of our fleet. Waller.
Thus pale they meet, their eyes with fury burn;
None greet; for none the greeting will return;
But in dumb furlines, each arm'd with care,
His foe profess, as brother of the war. Dryden's Fables:

4. To congratulate.
His lady, seeing all that channel from far,
Approach in haste to greet his victorie. Fairy Queen, b. i.

5. To pay compliments at a distance.
The king's a-bed,
And sent great largess to your officers;
This diamond he *greet*s your wife withal,
By the name of most kind hostess. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

6. To meet, as those do who go to pay congratulations. Not much in use.

Your haste
Is now urg'd on you. Shakespeare's King Lear.
—We will greet the time. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Such was that face on which I dwelt with joy,
Ere Greece assembled them'd the tides to Troy;
But parting then for that detested shore,
Our eyes, unhappy I never greeted more. Pope's Odyssey.

To GREET. v. n. To meet and salute.
There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace. Shakespeare.

GREET. n. f. [from the verb] He who greets.
GREETING. n. f. [from greet] Salutation at meeting, or compliments at a distance.

I from him
Give you all greetings, that a king, as friend,
Can send his brother. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

GREEZE. n. f. [Otherwise written greese. See GREECE, or GRIEZE, or GRICE, from degreess] A flight of steps; a
step.

In purity of manhood stand upright,
And say, this man's a flatterer: if one be,
So are they all; for every greese of fortune
Is smooth'd by that below: the learned pate,
Ducks to the golden fool. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

GREY. adj. [grey, greys, Lat.] Going in flocks or herds, like sheep or partridges.
No birds of prey are gregarious. Ray on the Creation.

GRENADE. n. f. [from pomum granatum, Latin.] A little hollow globe or ball of iron, or other metal, about two inches and a half in diameter, which, being filled with fine powder, is set on fire by means of a small fuse fastened to the touch-hole: as soon as it is kindled, the cafe flies into many shatters, much to the damage of all that stand near. These grenades serve to fire close and narrow passages, and are often thrown with the hand among the soldiers to disorder their ranks, more especially in those posts where they stand thickest; as in trenches, redoubts, and lodgments. Horr.

GRENADE. n. f. [grenadier, Fr. from grenade] A tall foot-soldier, of whom there is one company in every regiment:
such men being employed to throw grenades.
Peace allays the shepherd's fear
Of wearing cap of grenadier. Gay's Pastoral.

GRENADE. n. f. See GRENADIER.
Yet to express a Scot, to play that prize,
Not all those mouth grenades can suffice. Cleveland.
You may as well try to quench a flaming grenade with a shell of fair water, as hope to succeed. Watts.

GREY. n. f. A kind of fofile body.
A sort of tin-ore, with its grey; that is, a congeries of crystals, or sparks of spar, of the bigness of bayleaf, and of a brown shining colour immerſed therein. Grey's Miſſaun.

GREY. The preterite of grey.
The pleasing talk he fails not to renew;
Soft and more soft at ev'ry touch it grey. Dryden's Fables.

GREY. adj. [gris, French. More properly written gray] See GRAY.
This ancient ruffian, fir, whose life I spar'd at ſuit of his grey beard.
Our green youth copies what grey finners act,
When venerable age commends the fact. Dryden.

GREYHOUND. n. f. [gryghund, Saxon.] A tall fleet dog that chafes in fight.
First may a trusty greyhound transform himself into a tyger. Sidney, b. i.

So on the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
A haſt'ned hare from greedy greyhounds go. Sidney.
Th' impatient greyhound, ſlitt from far,
Bounds o'er the glebe to catch the fearful hare. Dryden.

GRIF. n. f. [from griev; griff, Welſh, probably from the Engliſh.]
1. Sorrow; trouble for ſomething paſt.

I will inſtruct my ſorrow to be proud;
For grief is proud, and makes his owner ſtout. Shakespeare.
Wringing of the hands, knocking the breaſt, or willing one's ſelf unborn, are but the ceremonies of ſorrow, the pom and oftentation of an effeminate grief, which ſpeak not ſo much the greatness of the miſery as the ſmallneſs of the mind. South's Sermon.

The mother was ſo afflicted at the loſs of a fine boy, who was her only ſon, that he died for grief of it. Addiſon's Spectator.

2. Grievance; harm. [Grief, French.]
Be factious for redreſs of all theſe griefs,
And I will ſet this foot of mine as far
As who goes fartheſt. Shakespeare.

The king hath ſent to know
The nature of your grief, and whereupon
You conjure from the breaſt of civil peace
Such bold hoſtility? Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

3. Pain; diſeaſe.
GRIEVANCE. n. f. [from grief]
1. A ſtate of uneaſineſs. Out of uſe.
2. The cauſe of uneaſineſs. Uſed of ſuch cauſes as are the effects of human conduct.

What remedy can be found againſt grievances, but to bring religion into countenance, and encourage thoſe who, from the hope of future reward, and dread of future puniſhment, will be moved to juſtice and integrity? Swift.

To GRIEVE. v. a. [greuer, French; griever, Flemiſh; griev vis, Latin.] To afflict; to hurt.
For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. Le iii. 33.

Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Eſay.
It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. Gen. vi. 6.

Grieved at the thought, he vow'd his whole endeavour
Should be to cloſe thoſe breaches. Rouse's Ambitious Step.

To GRIEVE. v. n. To be in pain for ſomething paſt; to mourn; to ſorrow, as for the death of friends.
Do not you grieve at this; I ſhall be ſent for in private to him: look you, he muſt ſeem thus to the world. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.

To GRIND. v. a. preter. I ground; part. pass. ground. [grun- ban, zegrunden, ground, Saxon.]

1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.

And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. Mat.
He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry the grinding. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest? Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean? Or do we grind inanimate corn into living and rational meat? Bentley's Sermons.

2. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.
Meeting with time, slack thing, said I,
Thy fithe is dull; whet it, for shame!

No marvel, sir, he did reply,
If it at length deserve some blame;
But where one man would have me grind it,
Twenty for one too sharp do find it. Herbert.

Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds,
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds. Dryd. Fables.

That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. To rub one against another.
So up he let him rise; who with grim look,
And countenance stern, upstanding, gan to grind
His grated teeth for great disdain. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

2. The instrument of grinding.
His heart a solid rock, to fear unknown,
And harder than the grinder's nether stone. Sandys.

Now exhort
Thy hands to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder. Phillips.

3. [grind-tooth.] The back teeth; the double teeth.
The teeth are in men of three kinds: sharp, as the foreteeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both. Bacon's Natural History.

He the raging lioness confounds,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks; so they
With the old hunter starve for want of prey. Sandys.

The jaw-teeth or grinders, in Latin molares, are made flat and broad a-top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind and commix the aliments. Ray on the Creation.

Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore herb-eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbut.

4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.
One, who at sight of supper, open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinders try'd. Dryd. Juven.

Both he brought;
He mouth'd them, and betwixt his grinders caught. Dryden.

GRINDLESTONE. n. f. [from grind and stone.] The stone
GRINDSTONE. n. f. on which edged instruments are sharpened.

Such a light and metall'd dance

1. Grasp; hold; seizure of the hand or paw.
Therefore still on high
He over him did hold his cruel claws, Threatning with greedy gripe to do him dy. Fairy Queen.

They put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand. Shak. Macb.

Should I
Slaver with lips, as common as the flairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripe with hands
Made hardy with hourly falsehood as with labour. Shakef.

He gave me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear, my lord,
Command my service. Shakespeare's Henry V.

I fell; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd. Dryd. Æn.

2. Squeeze; pressure.
Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast;
'Tis true, the harden'd breast resists the gripe,
And the cold lips return a kiss unripe. Dryden's Fables.

3. Oppression; crushing power.
I take my cause
Out of the gripe of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master. Shak. H. VIII.

4. Affliction; pinching distress.
Adam, at the news
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his senses bound! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

Can't thou bear cold and hunger? Can these limbs,
Fram'd for the tender offices of love,
Endure the bitter gripe of smarting poverty? Crane.

5. [In the plural.] Belly-ach; colic.
In the jaundice the choler is wanting; and the idler have a great sourness and gripe, with windiness. Feyer.

GRIPPER. n. f. [from gripe.] Oppressor; usurer; extortioner.

Others pretend zeal, and yet are professed usurers, grippers, monsters of men, and harpies. Burton on Melancholy.

GRIPINGLY. adv. [from griping.] With pain in the guts.
Clysters help, lest the medicine stop in the guts, and work gripingly. Bacon's Natural History.

GRIPPLE. n. f. A greedy snatcher; a griping miser.
GRISAMBER. n. f. Used by Milton for ambergris.

Beasts of chase, or fowl of game,
In pastry built, or from the spit, or boil'd, Grisamber steam'd. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. ii.

GRISSE. n. f. [See GREEZE, as it should be written.] A flap, or scale of steps.

Let me speak like ourself; and lay a sentence,
Which, as a gripe or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour. Shakespeare's Othello.

GRISKIN. n. f. [from griskin, roast meat, Irish.] The vertebrae of a hog broiled.

GRISLY. adj. [from grisl, Saxon.] Dreadful; horrible; hideous; frightful; terrible.

GRI

His gripy locks, long grown and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round. Fairy Queen.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The gripy toadfoot grown there might I see. Spenser.

My gripy countenance made others fly;
None durst come near, for fear of sudden death. Sh. H. VI.

Back step'd those two fair angels, half amaz'd
So sudden to behold the gripy king;
Yet thus, unmoy'd with fear, accost him soon. Milt. P. L.

For that damn'd magician, let him be girt
With all the gripy legions that troop
Under the footy flag of Acheron. Milton.

The beauteous form of fight
Is chang'd, and war appears a gripy light. Dryden's Fables.

In vision thou shalt see his gripy face,
The king of terrors, raging in thy race. Dryd. Innocence.

Thus the gripy spectre spoke again.
Close by each other laid, they press'd the ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a gripy wound. Dryden's Fables.

So rushes on his foe the gripy bear.
GRIST. n. f. [from grist, Saxon.]

1. Corn to be ground.
Get gripy to the mill to have plenty in store,
Left miller lack water. Waller's Husbandry.

A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;
Much gripy from Cambridge to his lot did fall,
And all the corn they us'd at Scholars-hall. Miller of Tresp.

2. Supply; provision.
Matter, as wife logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I, as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no gripy. Swift.

3. GRIST to Mill, is profit; gain.
The computation of degrees, in all matrimonial causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings gripy to the mill. Hyllie's Parergon.

GRISTLE. n. f. [from gristle, Saxon.] A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.

No living creatures, that have shells very hard, as cyffers, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have no bones within them, but only little gristles. Bacon's Nat. History.

Left the asperity or hardness of these cartilages should hurt the oesophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a skinny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore these annular gristles are not made round, or intire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilatation of the gullet. Ray on the Creation.

GRISTLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.
At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits, that are eaten off from the lung-pipes. Harvey.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one intire bone without these gristly junctures. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like womens fans. Ray on the Creation.

They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe. Grew.

Each pipe, distinguish'd by its gristly rings,
To cherish life aerial pasture brings. Blackmore's Creation.

GRIT. n. f. [from grit, Saxon.]

1. The coarse part of meal.

2. Oats hulk'd, or coarsely ground.

3. Sand; rough hard particles.
Silexian bole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as Castile soap. Grew's Musæum.

The sturdy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root
Pierce the obdurate grit and relive marie. Phillips.

4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder; the several particles of which are of no de-terminate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or dissolved by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass. They are opaque, and in many species fermenting with acids, and often fouled with heterogeneous matters. One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with salt-water into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards dissolved by water. This is the pulvis puteolanus of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plasters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysolite of the ancients, which they used in folding gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of folding metals better than borax, and may be had for carriage from the shores of New England. The ferruginous black glittering grit, is the black shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy.

GRO

What is commonly used in London is from Genoa. The coarse, glittering, brownish black is nearly of the same nature, but inferior, in all respects. Hill on Fossils.

GRITTINESS. n. f. [from gritty.] Sandiness; the quality of abounding in grit.

In fullers-earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grittiness. Martiner's Husbandry.

GRITTY. adj. [from grit.] Full of hard particles; consisting of grit.

I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof. Newton's Opt.

GRIZZELIN. adj. [More properly griddelin. See GRIDELIN.]
The Burgundy, which is a grizzelin or pale red, of all others, is surest to ripen in our climate. Temple.

GRIZZLE. n. f. [from griz, gray; griffaille, French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath fow'd a grizzle on thy face? Shakespeare.

GRIZZLED. adj. [from grizzle.] Interpersed with gray.
To the boy Caesar, send this grizzled head. Shakespeare.

His beard was grizzled: no.
—It was as I have seen it in his life. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

As in a green old age,
Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide
In plenteous growth, their asies ears to hide. Dryd. Juven.

GRIZZLY. adj. [from griz, gray, French.] Somewhat gray.
Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled, and turn white;
and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly. Bacon's Nat. History.

To GROAN. v. n. [from groan, Saxon; groen, Dutch.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.

Many an heir
Of these fair edifices, for my wars,
Have I heard groan and drop. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Men groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded crieth out. Job. xxiv. 12.

Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit. Wisd. v. 3.
So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign.

Under her own weight groaning. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs and groan his pains. South.

On the blazing pile his parent lays
Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away. Pope's Odyssey.

GROAN. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Breath expired with noise and difficulty.

Alas poor country,
Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd! Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;
And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive. Dryden.

2. Any hoarse dead sound.
Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GROANFUL. adj. [from groan and full.] Sad; agonizing.
Adown he fell it with so puissant wreat,
That back again it did aloft rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a groanful found. F. Rys.

GROAT. n. f. [from groat, Dutch; groß, Italian.]
1. A piece valued at four pence.

2. A proverbial name for a small sum.
My mother was wont
To call them woollen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

I dare lay a groat,
A tertian ague is at least your lot. Dryden's Fables.

Imagine a person of quality prevailed on to marry a woman much his inferior, and without a groat to her fortune. Swift.

3. GROATS. Oats that have the hulls taken off. Answerib.

GROCER. n. f. [This should be written groffer, from groß, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from groffus, a fig, which their present state seems to favour.]

A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar and plumbs and spices for gain. Wat'ss's Logik.

But still the offspring of your brain shall prove
The grocer's care, and brave the rage of Jove. Garrick.

GROCERY. n. f. [from grocer.] Grocers ware, such as tea;
sugar; raisins; spice.
His troops, being now in a country where they were not expected, met with many cart-loads of wine, grocery, and tobacco. Clarendon, b. viii.

GRO

GRO'GRAM. n. f. [gros grain, French; grassegranus, low Latin. Ainsworth.] Stuff woven with large woof and a rough pile.

Certes they're neatly cloth'd: I of this mind am,
Your only wearing is your grögeran. Donne.
Natalia affords great store of chamelots and grögerans. Sandys.
Some men will say this habit of John's was neither of camel's skin nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, grögeran, or the like. Brown's Vul. Err.
The natural sweetness and innocence of her behaviour shot me through and through, and did more execution upon me in grögeran than the greatest beauty in town had ever done in brocade. Addison's Spectator.
Plain goody would no longer down;
I was madam in her grögeran gown. Swoift.

GROIN. n. f. [Of uncertain derivation.] The part next the thigh.

The fatal dart arrives,
And through the border of his buckler drives;
Pass'd through and pierc'd his groin; the deadly wound
Cast from his chariot, roll'd him on the ground. Dryden.
GRO'WELL. n. f. [lithepsum, Latin.] Gromill or gray-mill. A plant.
The cup of the flower consists of one leaf, cut into five long narrow segments: the flower, which is, for the most part, small, consists of one leaf, is funnel-shaped, and open at the top: the point is encompassed by four embryo's, which become so many roundish hard polished seeds. Miller.
GROOM. n. f. [grom, Dutch.]

1. A boy; a waiter; a servant.
Then called she a groom, that forth him led Into a goodly lodge. Fairy Queen, b. i.
From Egypt's king ambassadours they come;
Them many a squire attends, and many a groom. Fairfax.
Think then, my foul! that death is but a groom
Which brings a taper to the outward room. Donne.
In the time of Edward VI. lived Sternhold, whom king Henry his father, a little before, had made groom of his chamber, for turning of certain of David's psalms into verse. Peacock on Poetry.

Would'st thou be touch'd
By the presuming hands of faucy grooms? Dryd. Den Schaff.
Amid' the fold he rages, nor the sheep
Their shepherds, nor the grooms their bulls can keep. Dryd.

2. A young man.
I presume for to intreat this groom,
And sily maid, from danger to redeem. Fairfax, b. ii.

3. A man newly married.
By this the brides are wak'd, their grooms are dress'd;
All Rhodes is fummon'd to the nuptial feast. Dryden.

GROOVE. n. f. [from grave.]

1. A deep cavern, or hollow in mines.
He might, to avoid idleness, work in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which at that time was little esteemed. Boyle.

2. A channel or hollow cut with a tool.
The screw-plate is a kind of steel well tempered, with several holes in it, each less than other; and in those holes are threads grooved inwards, into which grooves fit the respective taps that belong to them. Mason's Mach. Exer.

To GROOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut hollow.
The plates of iron fastened at the bottom of the box preserved the balance while it fell, and every joint of it was well grooved. Gulliver's Travels.

To GROPE. v. n. [grapan, Saxon.] To feel where one cannot see.

My sea-gown scarf about me, in the dark
Grop'd I, to find out them. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
We grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes. Jf. lix. 10.

They meet with darkness in the clearest light;
And grope at noon, as if involv'd with night. Sandys.
A boy was groping for eels, and laid his hand upon a snake. L'Estrange, Fable 131.

This, no doubt, is better for men than that they should in the dark grope after knowledge; as St. Paul tells us all nations did after God. Locke.

He heard us in our course,
And with his out-stretch'd arms around him grop'd. Addison.

O truth divine! enlighten'd by thy ray,
I grope, and guess no more, but see my way. Arbutnot.
To GROPE. v. a. To search by feeling in the dark; to feel without being able to see.

How vigilant to grope mens thoughts, and to pick out somewhat whereof they might complain. Hayward.

They have left our endeavours to grope them out by twilight, and by darkness almost to discover that, whose existence is evidenced by light. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

But Strephon, cautious, never meant
The bottom of the pan to grope. Swift.

GRO'PER. n. f. [from grope.] One that searches in the dark.

GROSS. adj. [gros, French; grasso, Italian; crassus, Latin.]

They can say that in doctrine, in discipline, in prayers, and in sacraments, the church of Rome hath very foul and gross corruptions. Hobbes, b. iv.

So far hath the natural understanding, even of sundry whole nations, been darkened, that they have not discerned no, not gross iniquity to be sin. Hobbes, b. i.

3. Intellectually coarse; palpable; impure; unrefined.

To all sense 'tis gross
You love my son: invention is asham'd,
Against the proclamation of thy passion,
To say thou do'st not. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.
Examples gross as earth exhort me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Like gross terms,

The prince will in the perfectness of time
Cast off his followers. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. ii.

Belial came last, than whom a spirit more lewd
Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love
Vice for itself. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

Is not religion so perfectly good in itself, above all, in its Author, that, without the grassest sensuality, we cannot but admire it. Spratt's Sermon.

It is a gross mistake of some men, to think that our wants only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be beneficent. Smalridge's Sermon.

4. Inelegant; disproportionate in bulk.

The sun's oppressive ray the roset bloom
Of beauty blinding, gives the gloomy hue, Thomson's Summer.
And feature gross.

5. Thick; not refined; not pure.

It is manifest, that when the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object is in the grosser, things shew greater; but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium, and the object in the finer. Bacon's Natural History.

Of elements,
The grosser feeds the purer; earth the sea,
Earth and the sea feed air. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Light fumes are merry, grosser fumes are sad;
Both are the reasonable soul run mad. Dryden's Fables.
Or suck the milks in grosser air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow. Pope.

6. Stupid; dull.

If the doth then the subtle sense excel,
How gross are they that drown her in the blood? Davies.
And in clear dream and solemn vision,
Tell her of things that no gross ear can hear. Milton.

Some men give more light and knowledge by the bare stating of the question with perspicuity and justice, than others by talking of it in gross confusion for whole hours together. Watson's Architecture.

7. Coarse; rough; opposite to delicate.

Fine and delicate sculptures are helped with nearness, and gross with distance. Watson's Architecture.

8. Thick; fat; bulky.

GROSS. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The main body; the main force.

The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste
The deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;
Or, if with caution leisurely were past,
Their numerous gross might charge us one by one. Dryden.

Several casuists are of opinion, that, in a battle, you should discharge upon the gross of the enemy, without levelling your piece at any particular person. Addison's Freethinker.

The gross of the people can have no other prospect in changes and revolutions than of public blessings. Addison.

2. The bulk; the whole not divided into its several parts.

Certain general inducements are used to make saleable your cause in gross. Hobbes, Preface.

There was an opinion in gross, that the soul was immortal. Abbot's Description of the World.

Remember, son,
You are a general: other wars require you;
For see the Saxon gross begins to move. Dryden's R. Arthur.

Notwithstanding the decay and loss of sundry trades and manufactures, yet, in the gross, we ship off now one third part more of the manufactures, as also lead and tin, than we did twenty years past. Child's Discourse on Trade.

3. Not individual, but a body together.

He hath ribbons of all the colours i' th' rainbow; they come to him by the gross. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

4. The chief part; the main mass.

Comets, out of question, have likewise power and effect over the gross and mass of things. Bacon, Essay 24.

The articulate sounds are more confused, though the gross of the sound be greater. Bacon's Natural History.

5. The number of twelve dozen. [Grasse, French.]

It is made up only of that simple idea of an unite repeated; and repetitions of this kind, joined together, make those distinct simple modes of a dozen, a gross, and a million. Locke.

GROSSLY. adv. [from gross.]

1. Bulkily; in bulky parts; coarsely: as, this matter is grossly pulverized.

2. Without subtilty; without art; without delicacy; without refinement; coarsely; palpably.

Such kind of ceremonies as have been so grossly and shamefully abused in the church of Rome, where they remain, are scandalous. Hobbes, b. iv. f. 12.

Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke devils sworn to others purpose;
Working so grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not whoop at them. Shakespeare's Hen. V.

And thine eyes
See it to grossly shown in thy behaviour,
That in their kind they speak it. Shakespeare.

What! are we cuckolds ere we have deserv'd it?
—Speak not so grossly. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

What I have said has been forced from me, by seeing a noble sort of poetry so happily reformed by one man, and so grossly copied by almost all the rest. Dryden.

If at any time I speak of light and rays as coloured, or endued with colours, I would be understood to speak not philosophically and properly, but grossly, and according to such conceptions as vulgar people, in seeing all these experiments, would be apt to frame. Newton's Opt.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs and motives of some facts, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the public by curious inquisitive heads. Swift.

GROSSNESS. n. f. [from gross.]

1. Coarseness; not subtilty; thickness; greatness of parts.

The purpose is peripetuous even as substance,
Whole grossness little characters sum up. Shakespeare.

And I will purge that mortal grossness so,
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Shakespeare.

The cause of the epilepsy from the stomach is the grossness of the vapours which rise and enter into the cells of the brain. Bacon's Natural History, No. 966.

Then all this earthy grossness quit;
Attir'd with stars we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death. Milton.

So this being the first colour which vapours begin to reflect, it ought to be the colour of the finest and most transparent fumes, in which vapours are not arrived to that grossness requisite to reflect other colours. Newton's Opt.

For envy'd wit, like Sol eclips'd, was known
Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own. Pope.

2. Inelegant fatness; unwieldy corpulence.

Wife men, that be over-fat and fleshy, go to sojourn abroad at the temperate diet of some sober man; and so, by little and little, eat away the grossness that is in them. Ajcham.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarseness.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief that they were fairies. Shak.

Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned. Dryden.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears! Clarissa.

GROT. n. f. [gratto, French; gratto, Italian.] A cave; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot,
Certain to meet that worst of evils, thought. Prior.

Awful see the Egerian grot. Pope.

GROTESQUE. adj. [gratesque, French; grotesco, Italian.]

Distorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.

The champaign head
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild,
Accels deny'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iv.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden's Duffresnoy.

An hideous figure of their faces they drew,
Nor lines, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true,
And this grotesque design expos'd to public view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
Grotesco roofs, and flucco floors. Pope's Sat. of Horace.

GRO'TTO. n. f. [gratto, French; gratto, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

Their careless chiefs to the cool grotto's run,
The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun. Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak. Woodward on Passils.

GROVE. n. f. [from grave.] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought
The wood began to move:
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say, a moving grove. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales;
Thrice happy fields! Milton.

She left the flow'ry field, and waving grove. Blackmore.

Banish'd from courts and love,
Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove. Granville.

Can fierce passions vex his breast,
While every gale is peace, and every grove
Is melody? Thomson's Spring.

To GRO'VE. v. n. [grufite, Islandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground feel.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.

The steel-head passage wrought,
And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground
He groveling fell, all gored in his gushing wound. Fa. Qu.

What see'st thou there? king Henry's diadem,
Inch'd with all the honours of the world!
If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
Until thy head be circled with the fame. Shakespeare's Hen. IV.

Now they lie
Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milt. Par. Lost.

Upon thy belly groveling thou shalt go. Milt. Par. Lost.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves: 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden's Duffresnoy.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation.

I must disclaim what'er he can express;
His groveling sense will show my passion less. Dryden.

Several thoughts may be natural which are low and groveling. Addison's Spectator.

GROUND. n. f. [grunb, Saxon; grundi, Danish.]

1. The earth, considered as solid, or as low.

Israel shall go on dry ground through the sea. Ex. xiv. 16.
From the other hill
To their fix'd station, all in bright array,
The cherubim descended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous. Milt. Par. Lost.

2. The earth as distinguished from air or water.

8. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterwards painted.

We see the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with shadows and darksome colours. Holwell on Providence.

When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and transparent grounds, as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters, and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable, than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden's Duffresnoy.

9. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported.

GRO

- Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground. Pope.
10. The plain song; the tune on which descants are raised. Get a prayer-book in your hand, And stand between two churchmen, good my lord; For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shaksf. R. III.
11. First hint; first traces of an invention; that which gives occasion to the rest. Though jealousy of state th' invention found, Yet love refin'd upon the former ground; That way the tyrant had reserv'd to fly, Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.
12. The first principles of knowledge. The first principles of knowledge. The concords will easily be known, if the fore grounds be thoroughly beaten in. Preface to Accidence.
- Here statesmen, or of them they which can read, May of their occupation find the grounds. Donne.
- After evening repalls, 'till bed-time, their thoughts will be taken up in the easy grounds of religion, and the story of scripture. Milton on Education.
13. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle. He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.
- Making happiness the ground of his unhappiness, and good news the argument of his sorrow. Sidney, b. ii.
- The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hooker, b. i. f. 1.
- Thou could'st not have discern'd Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake, No ground of enmity between us known. Mit. Par. Left.
- Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures. Clarendon, b. viii.
- Sound judgment is the ground of writing well. Roscomm.
- Love once given from her, and plac'd in you, Would leave no ground I ever would be true. Dryden.
- If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillemont.
- Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Swift.
- The miraculous increase of the professors of Christianity was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury's Sermons.
14. The field or place of action. Here was thy end decreed, when these men rose; And ev'n with theirs this act thy death did bring, Or hasten'd at the least upon this ground. Daniel's C. War.
15. The space occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire. At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to lose ground. Sidney.
- Heartless they fought, and quitted from their grounds, While our's with easy victory were crown'd. Dryd. Aureng.
- He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Senepa. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
16. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer. Ev'ning mist, Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides, And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels, Homeward returning. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
- Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory. Addison's Spectator.
- Even whilst we speak our conqueror comes on, And gathers ground upon us every moment. Addison.
17. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors. Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do, Giving no ground unto the house of York, They never then had sprung. Shakspeare's Henry VI.
- If they get ground and 'vantage of the kings, Then join you with them like a rib of steel, To make them stronger. Shakspeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
- He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Atterbury's Sermons.
- Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worst enemies of the two; but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph so gloriously over the others. Atterbury's Sermons.
18. State of progress or recession. I have known so many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Austria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.
- The squirrel is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage: she runs apace, and wears herself with her continual motion, and gets no ground. Dryden's Duffresnoy.
19. The soil to set a thing off.

GRO

- Like bright metal on a fullen ground, My reformation glittering o'er my faults, Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes, Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakspeare.
- To GROUND. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fix on the ground. Wherever she had ground her foot, neither gods nor men could force her to retire. Rambler.
2. To found as upon cause or principle. Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of comparison. Hooker, b. i. f. 8.
- It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with. Boyle.
- If your own actions on your will you ground, Mine shall hereafter know no other bound. Dryd. Aureng.
- Some eminent spirits, having signalized his valour, becomes to have influence on the people, to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rather incite us to fly to a single person than a multitude. Swift.
3. To settle in first principles or rudiments of knowledge. Being rooted and grounded in love. Eph. iii. 17.
- GROUND. The preterite and part. pass. of grind.
- He took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder. Exo. xxxii. 20.
- How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground And polish'd, looks a diamond? Hudibras, p. iii.
- GROUND is much used in composition for that which is near the ground, or near the ground.
- GROUND-ASH. n. f. A splin of ash taken from the ground; not a branch cut from a tree.
- A lance of tough groundstuffs the Trojan threw, Rough in the rind, and knotted as he grew. Dryden's Hen.
- Some cut the young adhes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large straight shoots, which they call groundstuffs. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- GROUND-BAIT. n. f. [from ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it.
- Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your groundbait, and to fish. Walton's Angler.
- GROUND-FLOOR. n. f. [ground and floor.] The lower story of a house.
- GROUND-IVY. n. f. [hedra terrestris, Latin.] Alehoof, or tunhoof.
- The shoots trail upon the ground, and emit roots from almost every joint, which fasten themselves into the earth: the leaves are roundish, thick, rough, and crenated on the edges: the helmet of the flower is roundish, bifid, and reflexed: the beard or lower lip is trifid, or cut into three segments; the middle segment is broad and bifid, and the flowers are produced at the joints of the shoots. The species are first, common groundivy, or gill-go-by-ground; and second, lesser groundivy. Miller.
- Alehoof or groundivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.
- GROUND-OAK. n. f. [ground and oak.]
- If the planting of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the coopers trade for the making of hoops, either of hael or ash; because one hoop made of the young shoots of a groundoak, would outlast six of the best ash. Mit.
- GROUND-PINE. n. f. [chamaepitys, Latin.]
- The leaves are narrow and trifid; the flower labiated: the place of the crest of the flower is supplied with little teeth: the lower lip is divided into three parts, the middle segment being split again into two parts. The flowers rarely grow in whorles, but one or two are produced at the wings of the leaves. Miller.
- The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of resin; whence its name groundpine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch-banks by roadsides. It is highly extolled, by the generality of medical writers, as an aperient, cephalick, and nervous medicine; but it is however little used at present. Hill's Mat. Med.
- GROUND-PLATE. n. f. [In architecture.] The outermost pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortises and tenons. In these also are mortises made to receive the tenons of the joists, the summer and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the stair-case and chimney way, and the binding joist. Harris.
- In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation, if it be a timber-building, of the several sizes of the groundplates, breast-summers, and beams. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- GROUND-PLAT. n. f.
1. The ground on which any building is placed. Wretched Gynecia, where can'st thou find any small ground-plot for hope to dwell upon? Sidney.
2. The ichnography of a building.
- GROUND-RENT. n. f. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's ground. A foot

GRO

- A foot in front, and thirty-three five sevenths deep, would bring in a ground-rent of five pounds. Arbutnot on Coins.
- GROUND-ROOM. n. f. A room on the level with the ground. I beseeched him hereafter to meditate in a ground-room; for that otherwife it would be impossible for an artist of any other kind to live near him. Tatler, N^o. 88.
- GROUNDLEDY. adv. [from ground.] Upon firm principles. He hath given the first hint of speaking groundedly, and to the purpose, upon this subject. Glanville.
- GROUNDLESS. n. f. [from ground.] Void of reason; without ground. But when vain doubt and groundless fear Do that dear foolish bosom tear. Prior.
- We have great reason to look upon the high pretensions which the Roman church makes to miracles as groundless, and to reject her vain and fabulous accounts of them. Atterbury.
- The party who distinguish themselves by their zeal for the present establishment, should be careful to discover such a reverence for religion, as may shew how groundless that reproach is which is cast upon them, of being averse to our national worship. Frederick, N^o. 129.
- GROUNDLESSLY. adv. [from groundless.] Without reason; without cause; without just reason. Divers persons have produced the like by spirit of vitriol, or juice of lemons; but have groundlessly ascribed the effect to some peculiar quality of those two liquors. Boyle on Colours.
- GROUNDLESSNESS. n. f. [from groundless.] Want of just reason. He durst not cite the words either of my book or sermons, lest the reader should have discovered the notorious falsehood and groundlessness of his calumny. Tillemont, Sermon 1.
- GROUNDLING. n. f. [from ground.] A fish which keeps at the bottom of the water; hence one of the low vulgar. Hamlet.
- It offends me to the soul, to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to flit the cars of the groundlings. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
- GROUNDLY. adv. [from ground.] Upon principles; solidly; not superficially. A man, groundly learned already, may take much profit himself, in using by epitome to draw other mens works, for his own memory sake, into shorter room. Alcan's Schoolm.
- GROUNDSEL. n. f. [groud and ryle, the basis, Sax. perhaps from sella, Latin.] The timber or raised pavement next the ground. The window-frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame; and all these rabbets, but that on the groundsel, are grooved square; but the rabbet on the groundsel is levelled downward, that rain or snow may the freer fall off. Mason's Mech. Exer.
- GROUNDSEL. n. f. [fencis, Latin.] It hath a flocculous flower, consisting of many florets, divided into several segments fitting on the embryo, contained in an empanment consisting of one leaf, and divided into many parts, afterwards becoming of a conical figure: the embryo afterward becomes a feed, furnished with down; at which time the empanment is reflexed, to make way for the seeds to escape. Miller.
- GROUNDWORK. n. f. [ground and work.]
1. The ground; the first stratum; the first part of the whole; that to which the rest is additional. A way there is in heav'n's expanded plain, Which, when the skies are clear, is seen below, And mortals by the name of milky know; The groundwork is of stars. Dryden's Fables.
2. The first part of an undertaking; the fundamentals. The main skill and groundwork will be to temper them such lectures and explanations, upon every opportunity, as may lead and draw them in willing obedience. Milton.
3. First principle; original reason. The groundwork thereof is nevertheless true and certain, however they through ignorance disguise the same, or through vanity. Spenser's State of Ireland.
- The morals is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction. Dryden.
- GROUP. n. f. [groupe, French; gruppo, Italian.] A crowd; a cluster; a huddle; a number thronged together. In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the middle of it, there are less groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden's Duffresnoy.
- I cannot doubt but the poet had here in view the picture of Zeus, in the famous group of figures which represents the two brothers binding Dirce to the horns of a mad bull. Addison.
- You should try your graving tools On this odious group of fools. Swift.
- To GROUP. v. a. [grouper, French.] To put into a crowd; To huddle together. The difficulty lies in drawing and disposing, or, as the painters term it, in grouping such a multitude of different objects, preserving still the justice and conformity of style and colouring. Prior.

8. To improve; to make progress. Grew in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. 2 Pet. iii. 18.
- As he grew forward in years he was trained up to learning, under one Pronapides, who taught the Palaigick letter invented by Linus. Pope's Essay on Homer.
9. To advance to any state. Nature, as it grows again towards earth, Is fashion'd for the journey dull and heavy. Shakspeare.
- They doubted whereunto this would grow. Acts v. 24.
- The king, by this time, was grown to such an height of reputation for cunning and policy, that every accident and event that went well was laid and imputed to his foresight. Bacon.
- But when to ripen'd manhood he shall grow, The greedy sailor shall the seas forego. Dryden's Virgil.
- Verse, or the other harmony of prose, I have so long studied and practised, that they are grown into a habit, and become familiar to me. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
10. To come by degrees; to reach any state gradually. After they grew to rest upon number, rather competent than vast, they grew to advantages of place, cunning diversions, and the like; and they grew more skilful in the ordering of their battles. Bacon's Essays.
- The trespasses of people are grown up to heaven, and their sins are got beyond all restraints of law and authority. Rogers.
11. To come forward; to gather ground. 10 S

GRO

Some seeing the end of their government nigh, and troublous practice growing up, which may work trouble to the next governour, will not attempt redress. Spenser on Ireland.
It was now the beginning of October, and Winter began to grow fast on: great rain, with terrible thunder and lightning, and mighty tempests, then fell abundantly. Kueller.
12. To be changed from one state to another; to become either better or worse; to turn.

Which only brutes in human form does yield,
And man grows wild in nature's common field. Dryden.
The nymph grew pale, and in a mortal fright,
Spent with the labour of so long a flight. Dryden.

Patient of command
In time he grew; and growing us'd to hand,
He waited at his master's board for food. Dryden's En.
We may trade and be busy, and grow poor by it, unless we regulate our expences. Locke.

You will grow a thing contemptible, unless you can supply the loss of beauty with more durable qualities. Swift.
Delos, by being reckoned a sacred place, grew to be a free port, where nations warring traded, as in a neutral country.
Arbutnot on Corin.

13. To proceed as from a cause.
What will grow out of such errors, as masked under the cloak of divine authority, impossible it is that ever the wit of man should imagine, till time have brought forth the fruits of them. Hooker.

Shall we set light by that custom of reading, from whence so precious a benefit hath grown? Hooker, b. v.
Take heed now that ye fail not to do this: why should damage grow to the hurt of the king. Ez. iv. 22.
Scipio Nafica feared left, if the dread of that enemy were taken away, the Romans would grow either to idleness or civil dissention. Abbe.

The want of trade in Ireland proceeds from the want of people; and this is not grown from any ill qualities of the climate or air, but chiefly from so many wars. Temple.

He struggles into birth, and cries for aid;
Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid:
He creeps, he walks; and, issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began. Dryden.

These clamours with disdain he heard,
Much grudg'd the praise, but more the rob'd reward. Dryd.
Do not, as some men, run upon the tilt, and taste of the sediments of a grudging uncommunicative disposition. Spektat.

Let us consider the ample provision of waters, those inexhausted treasures of the ocean; and though some have grudg'd
the great share that it takes of the surface of the earth, yet we shall propose this too, as a conspicuous mark and character of the wisdom of God. Bentley's Sermons.
I have often heard the Presbyterians say they did not grudge us our employments. Swift.

GRUDGE. v. n. [from grudge.]

without a due consistence, the serum saline, and of a yellowish green. Arbutnot on Diet.

GRUMOUSNESS. n. f. [from grumous.] Thickness of a coagulated liquor.
The cause may be referred either to the coagulation of the serum, or grumousness of the blood. Wifeman's Surgery.

GRUNSEL. n. f. [More usually groundfil, unless Milton intended to preserve the Saxon grunsel.] The groundfil; the lower part of the building.
Next came one
Who mourn'd in earnest, when the captive ark
Maim'd his brute image, head and hands lopp'd off
In his own temple, on the grunsel edge. Milton.

TO GRUNT. v. n. [from grunten, Latin.] To murmur like a hog.
TO GRUNTLE. v. n. [from grunten, Latin.] To murmur like
a hog.
And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar and burn,
Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn. Shaksp.

Lament, ye swine! in gruntings spend your grief;
For you, like me, have lost your sole relief. Gay's Past.
Thy brindled boar may slumber undisturb'd,
Or grunt secure beneath the chestnut shade. Tickel.

The scolding quean to louder notes doth rise,
To her full pipes the grunting hog replies;
The grunting hogs alarm the neighbours round. Swift.

GRUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] The noise of a hog.
Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
In panick horror of pursuing dogs;
With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,
Poor swine, as if their pretty hearts would break. Dryden.

From hence were heard
The grunts of bristled boars, and groans of bears,
And herds of howling wolves. Dryden's En.

GRUNTER. n. f. [from grunt.]
1. He that grunts.
2. A kind of fish. [Xiphois.] Ainsworth.

TO GRUTCH. v. n. [corrupted for the sake of rhyme from grudge.] To envy; to repine; to be discontented.
The poor at the enclosure doth grutch,
Because of abuses that fall,
Left some men should have but too much,
And some again nothing at all. Taffer's Husbandry.

But what we're born for we must bear,
Our frail condition it is such,
That what to all may happen here,
If't chance to me, I must not grutch. Ben. Johnson.

GRUTCH. n. f. [from the verb.] Malice; ill-will.
In it he melted leaden bullets,
To shoot at foes, and sometimes pullets;
To whom he bore so fell a grutch,
He ne'er gave quarter 't any such. Hudibras, p. i.

GRY. n. f. [γρυ.] Any thing of little value: as, the paring of the nails. Did.

 1. To watch by way of defence and security.

2. To protect; to defend.
 Naked the graces guarded you from all Dangers abroad, and now your thunder shall. Waller.
 Your pow'r you never use, but for defence,
 To guard your own or others innocence. Dryden.
 Fix'd on defence, the Trojans are not flow
 To guard their thore from an expected foe. Dryden.
 The port of Genoa is very ill guarded against the storms.
Addison on Italy.

3. To preserve by caution.
 One would take care to guard one's self against this particular imperfection, because it is that which our nature very strongly inclines us to. Addison's Spectator.

4. To provide against objections.
 Homer has guarded every circumstance with as much caution as if he had been aware of the objection. Notes on Odyssey.

5. To adorn with lists, laces, or ornamental borders.
 Give him a livery
 More guarded than his fellows. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.
 See a fellow

In a long motley, guarded with yellow. Shak. Henry VIII.
TO GUARD. v. n. To be in a state of caution or defence.
 There are other nice cases, in which a man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny. Collier on Popularity.

To guard against such mistakes, it is necessary to acquaint ourselves a little with words. Watts's Logick.

GUARD. n. f. [garde, French; ward, Teutonic.]
 1. A man, or body of men, whose business is to watch by way of defence or prevention.

The guard bare them, and brought them back into the guard-chamber.
Kings xiv. 28.

Up into heav'n, from paradise, in haste
 Th' angelick guards ascended, mute, and sad,
 For man. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

His guards behold him soaring through the skies. Dryden.
 Others are cooped in close by the strict guards of those whose interest it is to keep them ignorant. Locke.

He must be trusted to his own conduct, since there cannot always be a guard upon him, except what you put into his own mind by good principles.

They, usurping arbitrary power, had their guards and spies, after the practice of tyrants. Swift.

2. A state of caution; a state of vigilance.
 The great alteration which he made in the state ecclesiastical, caused him to stand upon his guard at home. Davies.
 Temerity puts a man off his guard. L'Estrange.
 It is wisdom to keep ourselves upon a guard. L'Estrange.
 Now he stood collected and prepar'd;

For malice and revenge had put him on his guard. Dryden.
 Men are always upon their guard against an appearance of design. Smalbridge's Sermons.

 A maid so tender, fair and happy,
 Run from her guardage to the footy bottom

Of such a thing as thou. Shaksp. Othello.
GUARDIAN. n. f. One who guards. Ainsworth.

GUARDIAN. n. f. [gardien, French, from guard.]
 1. One that has the care of an orphan; one who is to supply the want of parents.

I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian. Shaksp. Much Ado about Nothing.

When perjur'd guardians, proud with impious gains,
 Choak up the streets, too narrow for their trains! Dryden.
 Hocus, with two other of the guardians, thought it their duty to take care of the interest of the three girls. Arbutnot.

2. One to whom the care and preservation of any thing is committed.
 I gave you all,
 Made you my guardians, my depositaries;
 But kept a reservation to be follow'd

GUE

With such a number.
 3. A repository or storehouse. Not used. Shaksp. King Lear.
 —Carried to Colmekill,
 The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,
 And guardian of their bones. Shaksp. Macbeth.

GUARDIAN of the Spirituality. He to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed, during the vacancy of the see. He may be either guardian in law, or jure magistratus, as the archbishop is of any diocese within his province; or guardian by delegation, as he whom the archbishop or vicar-general doth for the time depute.

GUARDIAN. adj. Performing the office of a kind protector or superintendent.

My charming patroness protects me unseen, like my guardian angel; and thence my gratitude like a fairy, who is beautiful by stealth, and conceals the giver, when the bestows the gift. Dryden's Dedication to Cleomenis.

Thus shall mankind his guardian care engage,
 The promis'd father of the future age. Pope's Messiah.
 Mean while Minerva, in her guardian care,
 Shoots from the starry vaults through fields of air. Pope.

GUARDIANSHIP. n. f. [from guardian.] The office of a guardian.

The curate stretched his patent for the cure of souls, to a kind of tutelary guardianship over goods and chattels. L'Estr.

Thesusus is the first who established the popular state in Athens, assigning to himself the guardianship of the laws, and chief commands in war. Swift.

GUARDLESS. adj. [from guard.] Without defence.
 So on the guardless herd, their keeper slain,
 Rushes a tiger in the Libyan plain. Waller.

A rich land, guardless and undefended, must needs have been a double incitement. South's Sermons.

GUARDSHIP. n. f. [from guard.]
 1. Care; protection.
 How blest'd am I, by such a man led!
 Under whose wife and careful guardianship
 I now despise fatigue and hardship. Swift.

2. [Guard and ship.] A king's ship to guard the coast.

GUAYAVA. n. f. [n. f.]
 The flowers consist of five leaves, produced in a circular order, having many stamina or threads surrounding the ovary; the ovary is of a long tubulous figure, which becomes a fleshy fruit, crowned on the top, and containing many small hard seeds. The fruit, says Sir Hans Sloane, is extremely delicious and wholesome. They have only this inconvenience, that, being very astringent, they stop up the belly, if taken in great quantities. Miller.

GUERNATION. n. f. [gubernatio, Lat.] Government; superintendency; superior direction.

Perhaps there is little or nothing in the government of the kingdoms of nature and grace, but what is transacted by the man Jesus, inhabited by the divine power and wisdom, and employed as a medium or conscious instrument of this extensive gubernation. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

GUIDEON. n. f. [guyon, French.]
 1. A small fish found in brooks and rivers, easily caught, and therefore made a proverbial name for a man easily cheated.

'Tis true, no turbot dignify my boards;
 But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.
 This he did to draw you in, like so many gudgeons, to swallow his false arguments. Swift.

2. Something to be caught to a man's own disadvantage; a bait; an allurement; gudgeons being commonly used as baits for pike.

But fish not with this melancholy bait,
 For this fool's gudgeon, this opinion. Shaksp. Merch. of Ven.

GUERDON. n. f. [guerdon, gardon, French.] A reward; a recompense. A word now no longer in use.

He hearken'd, and did stay from further harms,
 To gain so goodly guerdon as the spake. Fairy Queen, l. i.
 But to the virgin comes, who all this while Amazed stands herself so mock'd to see,
 By him who has the guerdon of his guile,
 For so mistaking her true knight to be. Fairy Queen, l. i.
 He shall, by thy revenging hand, at once receive the just guerdon of all his former villainies. Keats.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
 To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
 But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
 And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
 Comes the blind fury with th' abhorred sheers,
 And slits the thin-spun life. Milton.

TO GUESS. v. a. [ghissen, Dutch.]
 1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principles of judgment.

Incapable and shallow innocents!
 You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death. Shaksp.
 Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
 Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound

That ever yet they heard. Shaksp. Matheth.
 —Hum! I guess at it.
 He that, by reason of his swift motions, can inform himself of all places and preparations, should he not very often guess rightly of things to come, where God pleaseth not to give impediment? Religio's History of the World.

There issue swarming bands
 Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and drefs,
 To be Taxallan enemies I guess. Dryd. Indian Emperor.
 The same author ventures to guess at the particular fate which would attend the Roman government. Swift.

Nor can imagination guess,
 How that ungrateful charming maid
 My purest passion has betray'd. Swift.

2. To conjecture rightly.
 One may guess by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferior deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himself had a right opinion concerning the true God. Stillington's Defence of Dile. on Rom. Idol.

TO GUESS. v. a. To hit upon by accident; to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judgment.
 If Xerxes was able to call every common soldier by his name in his army, it may be guessed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his lessons by heart. Locke.

GUESS. n. f. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgment without any positive or certain grounds.
 The enemy's in view; draw up your powers:
 Hard is the guess of their true strength and forces. Shaksp.
 A poet must confess
 His art's like physics, but a happy guess. Dryden.
 It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, before a due examination. Locke.

We may make some guesses at the distinction of things, into those that are according to, above, and contrary to reason. Locke.

This problem yet, this offspring of a guess,
 Let us for once a child of truth confess. Prior.
GUESSER. n. f. [from guess.] Conjecturer; one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good guessers, that the last fit will not be more violent than advantageous.
 If fortune should please but to take such a croquet,
 To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor,
 To give thee lawn-sleeves, a mitre and a rochet,
 Whom wouldst thou resemble? I leave thee a guesser. Swift.

GUESSINGLY. adv. [from guessing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly.
 What confederacy have you with the traitors
 Late footed in the kingdom?
 —I have a letter guessingly set down,
 Which came from one that's of a neutral heart,
 And not from one oppos'd. Shaksp. King Lear.

GUEST. n. f. [gæst, gize, Saxon; guest, Welsh.]
 1. One entertained in the house of another.
 They all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner. Lu. xix. 7.
 Methinks a father
 Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest
 That best becomes the table. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Tell my royal guest
 I add to his commands my own request. Dryden's Æn.
 O dears! dears! how fit a guest am I for you, since my heart can people you with wild ravenous beasts, which in you are wanting. Sidney.

Those happiest smiles
 That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know What guests were in her eyes; which parted thence As pearls from diamonds dropt. Shaksp. As You Like It.

GUESTCHAMBER. n. f. [guest and chamber.] Chamber of entertainment.
 Where is the guestchamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? Mar. xiv. 14.

TO GUGGLE. v. n. [gugghere, Italian.] To sound as water running with intermissions out of a narrow mouthed vessel.

GUIDAGE. n. f. [from guide.] The reward given to a guide.

GUIDANCE. n. f. [from guide.] Direction; government.

As to those who lived under the guidance of reason alone, without the assistance of supernatural light, it is highly probable that miracles, or a message from the dead, would persuade them. Atterbury's Sermons.

Particular application must be left to Christian prudence, under the guidance of God's holy spirit, who knows our necessity before we ask, and our ignorance in asking. Rogers.

A prince ought not to be under the guidance or influence of either faction, because he declines from his office of presiding over the whole to be the head of a party. Swift.

GUI

To GUIDE. v. a. [guider, French.]
 1. To direct in a way.

When the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth. Ja. xvi. 13.
 The new light served to guide them to their neighbours' coffers. Decay of Piety.

Whoever has a faithful friend to guide him in the dark passages of life, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse. South's Sermons.

2. To govern by counsel; to instruct.
 For thy name's sake lead me and guide me. Pf. xxxi. 3.
 3. To regulate; to superintend.

Women neglect that which St. Paul assigns them as their proper business, the guiding of the house. Decay of Piety.

GUIDE. n. f. [guide, French, from the verb.]
 1. One who directs another in his way.

Judas was guide to them that took Jesus. Acts i. 16.
 Thou gavest them a burning pillar of fire, to be a guide of the unknown journey. Wisd. xviii. 3.

Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance
 So far to make us with for ignorance?
 And rather in the dark to grope our way,
 Than led by a false guide to err by day? Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.
 While yet but young his father dy'd,
 And left him to an happy guide. Waller.

3. Director; regulator.
 Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature?
 In him we live, move and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument: nor is there any such art or knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work. Hooker, b. i. f. 3.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried,
 But we have sure experience for our guide. Dryden's Fables.

GUIDELESS. adj. [from guide.] Without a guide; without a governor or superintendent.

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost,
 Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,
 To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd. Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
 Whose every puff bears empty shades away,
 Which guideless in those dark dominions stray. Dryden.

GUIDER. n. f. [from guide.] Director; regulator; guide.
 Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us. Shak.
 That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vitals, opened an imposthume, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so stabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge chance for his surgeon, and providence for the guide of his hand. South.

GUIDON. n. f. [French.] A standardbearer; a standard. Obsolete.

GUILD. n. f. [gylde, Saxon, a fellowship, a corporation.] A society; a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's licence. Hence the common word guild or guildhall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonality of men gathered into one combination, supporting their common charge by mutual contribution. Crovel.

Towards three or four o'clock
 Look for the news that the guild hall affords. Shak. R. III.
 In woollen cloth it appears, by those ancient guilds that were settled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

As when the long-eard milky mothers wait
 At some sick miser's triple-bolted gate,
 For their defrauded absent foals they make
 A moan so loud, that all the guild awake. Pope's Dunciad.

GUILLE. n. f. [guille, gille, old French, the same with guile.] Deceitful cunning; insidious artifice; mischievous subtlety.

With fawning words he courted her awhile,
 And looking lovely, and oft sighing sore,
 Her constant heart did court with divers guile;
 But words and looks, and sighs she did abhor. Fairy Queen.

When I have most need to employ a friend,
 Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
 Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,
 When I am cold in zeal to you or yours. Shak. Rich. III.

We may, with more successful hope, resolve
 To wage by force or guile eternal war, resolve
 Nor thou his malice and false guile condemn:
 Subtle he needs must be who could seduce
 Angels. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ix.

GUILFUL. adj. [guile and full.]
 1. Wily; insidious; mischievously artful.

The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guileful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skillful against guile. Hooker, b. iii. f. 8.

Without expence at all,
 By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd. Shak. H. VI.
 He

GUIL

He saw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unweeting, seconded
Upon her husband. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
The guileful phantom now forsook the shroud,
And flew sublime, and vanish'd in a cloud. Dryden's Æn.
2. Treacherous; secretly mischievous.
I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corps of Bassianus lay. Shaksp. Tit. Andr.
GUILEFULLY. adv. [from guileful.] Infidiously; treacherously.
To whom the tempter guilefully reply'd. Milton's P. Lost.
GUILEFULNESS. n. f. [from guileful.] Secret treachery; tricking cunning.
GUILER. n. f. [from guile.] Without deceit; without infiduousness; simply honest.
GUILER. n. f. [from guile.] See BEGUILE.] One that betrays into danger by insidious practices.
But he was wary wife in all his ways,
And well perceived his delectful flight;
Ne suffered lust his safety to betray;
So goodly did beguile the guiler of the prey. Fairy Queen.
GUILTY. n. f. [guilt, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself.]
1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.
It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution. Bacon's Henry VII.
When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond on Fundamentals.
2. A crime; an offence.
Close pent up guilts
Rive your concealing continents, and ask
These dreadful summoners grace. Shaksp. King Lear.
GUILTY. adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence; without clearness of conscience.
Bloody and guilty, guiltily awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings, and despair and die. Shak. R. III.
GUILTYNESS. n. f. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.
He thought his flight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of a humble faithfulness. Sidney, b. ii.
The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
O, in the battle think on guiltiness. Shaksp. Richard III.
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shaksp. Richard III.
GUILTLSS. adj. [from guilt.] Innocent; free from crime.
I am in this commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning. Shaksp. R. III.
Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach. Shaksp. Othello.
Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity. Num. v. 31.
Thou, who do'st all thou wilt at thy will,
And never wiltst aught but what is right,
Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;
Thine be my kingdom. Fairfax.
Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,
Nor knew nor wish'd he, that those vows he made
On his own head should be at last repaid. Dryden.
Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,
When love approach'd me under friendship's name. Pope.
GUILTLESSLY. adv. [from guiltless.] Without guilt; innocently.
GUILTLESSNESS. n. f. [from guiltless.] Innocence; freedom from crime.
A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltless is not always with ease oppressed. Sidney, b. ii.
I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guiltless I was better assured than any man living could be. King Charles.
GUILTY. adj. [guilt, Saxon, one condemned to pay a fine for an offence.]
1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.
Is there not a ballad of the king and the beggar?
—The world was guilty of such a ballad some three ages since. Shaksp. Love's Labour's Lost.
Mark'd you not
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence' death? Shak.
We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he besought us, and we would not hear. Gen. xlii. 21.
With mortal hatred I purfue'd his life,
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife;
Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotence of mind. Dryden.

GUL

Farewell the stones
And threshold, guilty of my midnight means. Dryden.
There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man, that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul. Tillotson's Sermons.
2. Wicked; corrupt.
All the tumult of a guilty world,
Toft by ungenerous passion, sinks away. Thomson's Spring.
GULNEA. n. f. [from Guinea, a country in Africa abounding with gold.] A gold coin valued at one and twenty shillings.
By the word gold I must be understood to design a particular piece of matter; that is, the last guinea that was coined. Lake.
GUINEADROPPER. n. f. [from guinea and drop.] One who cheats by dropping guineas.
Who now the guineadropper's bait regards,
Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards. Gay.
GUINEAHEN. n. f. A small Indian hen.
GUINEAPEPPER. n. f. [from Guinea, Latin.]
The characters are: the flowers consist of one leaf, and are expanded like those of nightshade: the fruit is soft, fleshy and membranous, divided into two or more cells, in which are contained many flat kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.
GUINEAPIG. n. f. A small animal with a pig's snout.
GUISE. n. f. [The same with guise; guise, French; guise, Saxon, the p or w being changed as is common into g.]
1. Manner; mien; habit; cast of behaviour.
His own fire, and matter of his guise,
Did often tremble at his horrid view. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Thus women know, and thus they use the guise,
T' enchant the valiant and beguile the wife. Fairfax, b. iv.
Lo you! here he comes: this is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep: observe her, stand close. Shaksp. Macbeth.
They stand a horrid front
Of dreadful length, and dazzling arms, in guise
Of warriors old, with order'd spear and shield,
Awaiting what command their mighty chief
Had to impose. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
By their guise
Just men they seem, and all their study bent
To worship God a-right. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
Back, shepherds, back;
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes and such court guise,
As Mercury did first devise. Milton.
Their external shapes are notoriously accommodated to that law or guise of life that nature has designed them. Milton.
2. Practice; custom; property.
This would not be slept;
Old guise must be kept. Ben. Jonson.
The swain reply'd, it never was our guise
To slight the poor, or aught humane despise. Pope.
3. External appearance; dress.
When I was very young, nothing was so much talk'd of as rickets among children, and consumptions among young people: after these the spleen came in play, and then the scurvy, which was the general complaint, and both were thought to appear in many various guises. Temple.
The Hugonots were engaged in a civil war, by the specious pretences of some, who, under the guise of religion, sacrificed so many thousands to their own ambition. Swift.
GUITAR. n. f. [from guitar, Italian; guitarre, French.] A stringed instrument of music.
Sallads and eggs, and lighter fare,
Tune the Italian spark's guitar. Prior.

GULCHIN. n. f. Skinner.
GULES. adj. [perhaps from gule, the throat.] Red: a barbarous term of heraldry.
Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground: gules, gules;
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? Shaksp. Timon of Athens.
He whose fable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the knight resemble,
When he laid couched in the ominous horse,
Hath now his dread and black complexion smear'd
With heraldry more difmal; head to foot,
Now he is total gules. Shaksp. Hamlet.
GULF. n. f. [from gulf, Italian.]
1. A bay; an opening into land.
Pisaurius, the Venetian admiral, knowing himself unable to encounter with the Turks great fleet at sea, withdrew himself farther off from the island Corfu, into the gulf of the Adriatic. Knolles's History of the Turks.
2. An abyss; an unmeasurable depth.
Thence turning back, in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavy corse with easy pace
To yawning gulf of deep Avernus' hole;
By that same hole, an entrance dark and base,
With smoke and sulphur hiding all the place,
Descends to hell. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 5. I know.

GUL

I know thou'd'st rather
Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf,
Than flatter him in a bower. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
This is the gulf through which Virgil's Alecto shoots herself into hell: the fall of waters, the woods that encompass it, are all in the description. Addison on Italy.
The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads should turn giddy at the imagination of gaping abyfles and unfathomable gulfs? Bentley.
3. A whirlpool; a sucking eddy.
England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf. Shaksp. Henry V.
4. Any thing insatiable.
Scul of dragon, tooth of wolf,

Of the ravening salt sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' th' dark. Shaksp. Macbeth.
GU'LF. adj. [from gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools; voracious.
Rivers arise; whether thou be the son
Of utmost Tweed, or Ouse, or gulfy Dun. Milton.
At their native realms the Greeks arriv'd,
All who the war of ten long years surviv'd,
And 'scap'd the perils of the gulfy main. Pope's Odyssey.
High o'er a gulfy sea the Pharian Isle Fronts the deep roar of dissembling Nile. Pope's Odyssey.
To GULL. v. a. [from guller, to cheat, old French.] To trick; to cheat; to defraud; to deceive.
If I do not gull him into a ray word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
Yet love these fore-ries did remove, and move
Thee to gull thine own mother for my love. Donne.
He would have gull'd him with a trick,
But Mart was too too politic. Hudibras, p. ii.
They are not to be gull'd twice with the same trick. L'Estr.
The Roman people were grossly gull'd twice or thrice over, and as often enslaved in one century, and under the same pretence of reformation. Dryden's Æn. Dedication.
By their designing leaders taught,
The vulgar, gull'd into rebellion, arm'd;
For this advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be out-riden, though out-run;
By fortune he was now to Venus triu'd,
And with them Mars in Capricorn was join'd:
Of him disposing in his own abode,
He sooth'd the goddess, while he gull'd the god. Dryden.
GULL. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A sea-bird.
2. A cheat; a fraud; a trick.
I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it.
Either they have these excellencies they are praised for, or they have not; if they have not, 'tis an apparent cheat and gull. Government of the Tongue.
3. A stupid animal; one easily cheated.
Being fed by us you us'd us, so,
As that ungentle gull, the cuckoo bird,
Useth the sparrow. Shaksp. Henry IV. p. i.
Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious geck and gull
That e'er invention plaid on. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.
That paltry story is untrue,
And forg'd to cheat such gulls as you. Hudibras, p. ii.
GU'LCATCHER. n. f. [from gull and catch.] A cheat; a man of trick; one who catches silly people.

To GULP. v. a. [from golen, Dutch.] To swallow eagerly; to suck down without intermission.
He loofens the fish, gulps it down, and so soon as ever the morfel was gone wipes his mouth. L'Estrange.
I thirsty stand,
And see the double flaggon charge their hand;
See them puff off the froth, and gulp amain,
While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain. Gay.
GULP. n. f. [from the verb.] As much as can be swallowed at once.
In deep suspirations we take more large gulps of air to cool our heart, nor charged with love and sorrow. More.
As oft as he can catch a gulp of air,
And peep above the seas, he names the fair. Dryden's Fables.
GUM. n. f. [from gummis, Latin.]
1. A vegetable substance differing from a resin, in being more viscid and less friable, and generally dissolving in aqueous menstrua; whereas resins, being more sulphurous, require a spirituous solvent. Quincy.
One whose eyes,
Albeit unuse to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shaksp. Othello.
He ripens spices, fruit, and precious gums,
Which from remotest regions hither come. Waller.
Her maiden train,
Who bore the vests that holy rites require,
Incense, and od'rous gums, and cover'd fire. Dryden's Fables.
2. [from gummis, Dutch.] The fleshy covering that invests and contains the teeth.
From the babe that milks me
I'd pluck my nipple from his boneless gums. Shak. Macbeth.
Untwists a wire, and from her gums
A set of teeth completely comes. Swift.
To GUM. v. a. [from the noun.] To close with gum; to smear with gum.
The eyelids are apt to be gummed together with a viscous humour. Wifeman's Surgery.

 comfort of them. L'Estrange, Fable 38.
- We have lost, in a great measure, the gust and relish of true happiness. Tillotson's Sermons.
4. Turn of fancy; intellectual taste.
- The principal part of painting is to find what nature has made most proper to this art, and a choice of it may be made according to the gust and manner of the ancients. Dryden.
5. [From gustis, Illickick.] A sudden violent blast of wind.
- Some troops pursue the bloody-minded queen,
 That led calm Henry, though he were a king,
 As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust, Command an argosie to stem the waves. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
- You may as well forbid the mountain pines
 To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
 When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakespeare.
- Presently come forth swarms and volleys of libels, which are the gusts of liberty of speech restrained. Bacon's H. VII.
- As when fierce northern blasts from th' Alps descend,
 From his firm roots with struggling gusts to rend
 An aged sturdy oak, the rattling sound Grows loud. Denham.
- Part stay for passage, 'till a gust of wind Ships o'er their forces in a shining sheet. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.

- GYRATION. n. f. [from gyre, Latin.] The act of turning any thing about.
- This effluvium attenuateth and impelleth the neighbour air, which, returning home, in a gyration carrieth with it the obvious bodies into the electrick. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- If a burning coal be nimbly moved round in a circle with gyrations, continually repeated, the whole circle will appear like fire; the reason of which is, that the sensation of the coal in the several places of that circle remains impreſſed on the sensorium, until the coal return again to the same place. Newt.
- GYRE. n. f. [from gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing going in an orbit.
- Ne thenceforth his approved skill to ward,
 Or strike, or hurlen round in warlike gyre,
 Remember'd he; ne car'd for his safe guard,
 But rudely rag'd. Fairy Queen, b. ii. cant. 5.
- Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,
 And to the South by thy direction fly?
 Or eagle in her gyres the clouds embrace?
 He fashion'd those harmonious orbs, that roll
 In restless gyres about the Arctick pole. Sandys.

 A rising root, that held his fasten'd feet;
 So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,
 His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryd. Fables.
- To GYVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fetter; to shackle; to enchain; to enſnare.
- With as little a web as this, will I enſnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do. I will gyve thee in thine own courtship. Shakespeare's Othello.

H.

HAB

H is in English, as in other languages, a note of aspiration, founded only by a strong emission of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of speech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The b in English is scarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as haufe, behaviour: where it is followed by a consonant it has no sound, according to the present pronunciation: but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the syllable guttural; as right, lought.

HA. interj. [ha, Latin.]
1. An expression of wonder, surprize, sudden question, or sudden exertion.

You shall look fairer ere I give or hazard:
What says the golden cheft? ha! let me fee. Shakefp.
Ha! what art thou! thou horrid headless trunk!
It is my Haftings! Rowe's Jane Shore.

2. An expression of laughter.
He faith among the trumpets ha, ha, and he smelleth the battle afar off. Jeb xxxix. 25.
Ha, ha, 'tis what so long I wish'd and vow'd;
Our plots and delusions
Have wrought such confusions,
That the monarch's a slave to the crowd. Dryd. Allion.

HAKE. n. f. A fish.
HABEAS CORPUS. [Latin.] A writ, the which, a man indicted of some trespass, being laid in prison for the same, may have out of the King's Bench, thereby to remove himself thither at his own costs, and to answer the cause there. Covel.

HABERDASHER. n. f. [This word is ingeniously deduced by Minsheu from habt ihr dafs, German, have you this, the expression of a shopkeeper offering his wares to sale.] One who sells small wares; a pedlar.
Because these cunning men are like haberdashers of small wares, it is not amiss to set forth their shop. Bacon's Essays.
A haberdasher, who was the oracle of the coffeehouse, declared his opinion. Addison's Spectator, No. 48.

HABERDINE. n. f. A dried salt cod. Ainsworth.
HABERGEON. n. f. [haubergeon, French; halbergium, low Lat.] Armour to cover the neck and breast; breastplate; neckpiece; gorget.

And halbert some, and some a haberdine;
So every one in arms was quickly dight. Fairfax, b. i.
The foot let fly, and grazing
Upon his shoulder, in the passing,
Lodg'd in Magnano's brags habergeon. Hudibras, p. i.

HABILIMENT. n. f. [habiliment, French.] Drefs; cloaths; garment.

He the fairest Una found,
Strange lady, in so strange habiliment,
Teaching the fatyres. Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 6.
My riches are these poor habiliments,
Of which if you should here disfigure me,
You take the fun and substance that I have. Shakespeare.

The clergy should content themselves with wearing gowns and other habiliments of Irish drapery. Swift.
TO HABILITATE. v. n. [habilitare, French.] To qualify; to entitle.

Divers persons in the house of commons were attained, and thereby not legal, nor habilitate to serve in parliament, being disabled in the highest degree. Bacon's Henry VII.

HABILITATION. n. f. [from habilitate.] Qualification.
The things formerly spoken of, are but habilitations towards arms; and what is habilitation without intention and act? Bacon, Essay 30.

HABILITY. n. f. [habilitate, French.] Faculty; power.
HABIT. n. f. [habitus, Latin.]
1. State of any things; as, habit of body.

2. Drefs; accoutrement.
I shifted
Into a madman's rags, t' assume a semblance
The very dogs disdain'd; and in this habit
Met I my father. Shakespeare's King Lear.

HAB

If you have any justice, any pity;
If ye be any thing, but churchmen's habits. Shakespeare.
Both the poets being drest in the same English habit, story compared with story, judgment may be made betwixt them. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

The scenes are old, the habits are the same
We wore last year. Dryden's Indian Emperor.
There are among the statues several of Venus, in different habits. Addison on Italy.

The clergy are the only set of men who wear a distinct habit from others. Swift.
3. Habit is a power or ability in man of doing any thing, when it has been acquired by frequent doing the same thing. Locke.
He hath a better bad habit of frowning than the count Palatine. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

4. Custom; inveterate use.
This is the last fatal step but one, which is, by frequent repetition of the sinful act, to continue and persist in it, till at length it settles into a fixed confirmed habit of sin; which being properly that which the apostle calls the finishing of sin, ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but also as to actual infection. South's Sermon.

No civil broils have since his death arose,
But faction now by habit does obey;
And wars have that respect for his repose,
As winds for halcyons when they breed at sea. Dryden.

The force of education is so great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what shape we please, and give the impressions of such habits as shall ever afterwards remain. Atterbury's Sermon.

TO HABIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To drefs; to accoutre;
to array.
Present yourself and your fair princefs
Before Leontes;
She shall be habited as it becomes
The partner of your bed. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Having called to his memory Sir George Villiers, and the cloaths he used to wear, in which at that time he seemed to be habited, he thought him to be that person. Clarendon.

They habited themselves like those rural deities, and imitated them in their rustic dances. Dryden.
HABITABLE. adj. [habitabilis, Fr. habitabilis, Lat.] Capable of being dwelt in; capable of sustaining human creatures.

By means of our solitary situation, we know well most part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown. Bacon.
That was her torrid and inflaming time;
This is her habitable tropic clime. Dante.

Look round the habitable world, how few Know their own good, or knowing it, pursue. Dryden.
HABITABLENESS. n. f. [from habitable.] Capacity of being dwelt in.

The cutting of the Equinoctial line decides that controversy of the habitableness of the Torrid zone. Mor.
Those ancient problems of the spherical roundness of the earth, the being of antipodes, and of the habitableness of the torrid zone, are abundantly demonstrated. Ray.

HABITANCE. n. f. [habitation, Latin.] Dwelling; abode.
What art thou, man, if man at all thou art,
That here in desert hast thine habitation?
And these rich heaps of wealth do't hide apart
From the world's eye, and from her right ufance. Fa 2e.

HABITANT. n. f. [habitant, Fr. habitans, Latin.] Dweller;
one that lives in any place; inhabitant.
Not to earth are those bright luminaries
Officious; but to the earth's habitant:
And for the heav'n's wide circuit, let it speak
The maker's high magnificence. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Pow'r's celestial to each other's view
Stand still confest, though distant far they lie,
Or habitants of earth, or sea, or sky. Pope's Odyssey.
HABITATION. n. f. [habitation, French; habitation, Latin.]
1. The act of dwelling; the state of a place receiving dwellers. Amplitude

HAB

Amplitude almost immense, with stars
Numerous, and every star perhaps a world
Of distant habitation. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

For want of habitation and repair,
Dissolve to heaps of ruins. Denham's Sephy.
Rocks and mountains, which in the first ages were high and craggy, and consequently then inconvenient for habita- tion, were by continual deterration brought to a lower pitch. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Place of abode; dwelling.
Wisdom, to the end she might have many, built her house of that nature which is common unto all; she made not this or that man her habitation, but dwelt in us. Hooker, b. v.
God oft defends to visit men
Unseen, and through their habitations walks
To mark their doings. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.

HABITATOR. n. f. [Latin.] Dweller; inhabitant.
So is his presence more continued unto the northern inhabitants; and the longest day in Cancer is longer unto us than that in Capricorn unto the northern habitators. Brown.

HABITUAL. adj. [habitus, from habis, French.] Customary; accustomed; inveterate; established by frequent repetition.
Sin, there in pow'r before
Once actual; now in body, and to dwell
Habitual habitant. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
Art is properly habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims. South.

By length of time
The scurf is worn away of each committed crime:
No speck is left of their habitual stains;
But the pure ether of the soul remains. Dryden's En.
'Tis impossible to become an able artist, without making your art habitual to you. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

HABITUALLY. adv. [from habitual.] Customarily; by habit.
Internal graces and qualities of mind sanctify our natures, and render us habitually holy. Atterbury's Sermons.

TO HABITUATE. v. a. [habituare, French.] To accustom; to use one's self by frequent repetition.
Men are first corrupted by bad counsel and company, and next they habituate themselves to their vicious practices. Tillot.
Such as live in a rarer air are habituated to the exercise of a greater muscular strength. Arbuthnot on Air.

HABITUDE. n. f. [habitus, Latin; habitude, French.]
1. Relation; respect; state with regard to something else.
We cannot conclude this complexion of nature from the vicinity or habitude they hold unto the sun. Brown's Vul. Err.
The will of God is like a freight unalterable rule; but the various comportments of the creature, either thwarting this rule, or holding conformity to it, occasions several habitudes:
of this rule into it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

It results from the very nature and being of things, as they stand in such a certain habitude, or relation to one another.
South's Sermons.

As by the objective part of perfect happiness we understand that which is best and last, and to which all other things are to be referred; so by the formal part must be understood the best and last habitude of man toward that best object. Nerr.

In all the habitudes of life
The friend, the mistress, and the wife;
Variety we still pursue. Swift.

2. Familiarity; converse; frequent intercourse.
His knowledge in the noblest useful arts,
Was such dead authors could not give;
But habitudes with those who live. Dryden.
To write well, one must have frequent habitudes with the best company. Dryden.

3. Long custom; habit; inveterate use.
Mankind is not more liable to deceit than willing to continue in a pleasing error, strengthened by a long habitude.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Thy ear, inur'd to charitable sounds,
And pitying love, must feel the hateful wounds
Of jest obscene, and vulgar ribaldry,
The ill-bred question, and the loud reply,
Brought by long habitude from bad to worse;
Must hear the frequent oath, the direful curse. Prior.

4. The power of doing any thing acquired by frequent repetition.
It is impossible to gain an exact habitude, without an infinite number of acts and perpetual practice. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

HABNAB. adv. [hap ne bap, or nab, as would ne would, will ne will; that is, let it happen or not.] At random; at the mercy of chance; without any rule or certainty of effect.
He circles draws and squares,
With cyphers, astral characters;
Then looks 'em o'er to understand 'em,
Although set down habnab at random. Hudibras, p. ii.

TO HACK. v. a. [haccan, Saxon; hacken, Dutch; hacker, Fr.
from acare, an axe, Saxon.]

HAG

1. To cut into small pieces; to chop; to cut slightly with frequent or unskilful blows.
He put on that armour, whereof there was no one piece wanting, though hacked in some places, bewraying some fight not long since passed. Sidney.

What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done, and say it was in fight! Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. i.
Richard the second here was hack'd to death. Shak. R. III.
I'll fight 'till from my bones my flesh be hackt. Shakespeare.

One flourishing branch of his most royal root
Is hackt down, and his summer leaves all faded,
By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe. Shakespeare's Rich. II.
Burn me, hack me, hew me into pieces. Dryden.
But fate with butchers plac'd thy priestly stall,
Meek modern faith to murder, hack and mawl. Pope.

Not the hack'd helmet, nor the dusty field,
But purple vests and flow'ry garlands please. Addison's Ovid.
2. To speak unready, or with hesitation.
Disarm them, and let them question; let them keep their limbs whole, and hack our English. Shakespeare.

TO HACK. v. n. To hackney; to turn hackney or prostitute. Hammer.
I could be knighted.—What! thou liest. Sir Alice Ford, these knights will hack, and so thou shouldst alter the article of thy gentry. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

HA'CKLE. n. f. Raw silk; any filmy substance unspun.
Take the hackle of a cock or capon's neck, or a plover's top: take off one side of the feather, and then take the hackle silk, gold or silver thread, and make these fast at the bent of the hook. Walton's Angler.

TO HA'CKLE. v. a. [from hack.] To drefs flax.
HA'CKNEY. n. f. [hacnai, Welsh; hackneye, Teuton. haquenée,
French.]

1. A pacing horse.
2. A hired horse; hired horses being usually taught to pace, or recommended as good pacers.
Light and lewd persons were as easily suborned to make an affidavit for money, as post-horses and hackneys are taken to hire. Eaton's Off. of Alienation.

Who, mounted on a broom, the nag
And hackney of a Lapland hag,
In quest of you came hither post,
Within an hour, I'm sure, at most. Hudibras, p. iii.

3. A hireling; a prostitute.
Three kingdoms rung
With his accumulative and hackney tongue. Recommen.
That is no more than every lover
Does from his hackney lady suffer. Hudibras.

4. Anything let out for hire.
A wit can study in the streets;
Not quite so well, however, as one mought;
A hackney coach may chance to spoil a thought. Pope.

5. Much used; common.
These notions young students in physick derive from their hackney authors. Harvey on Consumption.

TO HA'CKNEY. v. a. [from the noun.] To practise in one

I'll bury to the haft in her fair breast. Dryd. and Lee's Oedip.
These extremities of the joints are the hafts and handles of the members. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

A needle is a simple body, being only made of steel; but a sword is a compound, because its haft or handle is made of materials different from the blade. Watts's Logick.

TO HAFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To set in a haft. Ainsw.
HAG. n. f. [hæge, a goblin, Saxon; hecht, a witch, Dutch.]
1. A fury; a she monster.

Thus

HAI

Thus spoke th' impatient prince, and made a pause;
His foul bag rais'd their heads, and clapt their hands;
And all the powers of hell, in full applause,
Flourish'd their snakes, and tost their flaming brands. Craß.
2. A witch; an enchantress.
Out of my door, you witch! you bag; you baggage, you poulcat, you runnion. Shakef. Merry Wives of Windsor.
3. An old ugly woman.

Such affectations may become the young;
But thou, old bag, of threecore years and three,
Is shewing of thy parts in Greek for thee? Dryden's Juven.
To HAG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment; to harass with vain terror.

That makes them in the dark see visions,
And bag themselves with apparitions. Hudibras, p. iii.
How are superstitious men haggard out of their wits with the fancy of omens, tales, and visions! L'Estrange.

HA'GARD. adj. [bagard, French.]

1. Wild; untamed; irreclaimable.

To let them down before that his sights end,
As bagard hawk, presuming to contend
With hardy fowl above his able might,
His weary pounces all in vain doth spend,
To truss the prey too heavy for his flight. Fairy Queen.

2. [Hager, German.] Lean. To this fence I have put the following passage; for so the author ought to have written.

A haggard carion of a wolf, and a jolly sort of dog, with good flesh upon's back, fell into company together. L'Estr.
3. [Haze, Welsh.] Ugly; rugged; deformed; wildly disordered.

She's too disdainful;
I know her spirits are as coy and wild,
As bagard as the rock. Shakespeare.

Fearful besides of what in fight had pass'd,
His hands and haggard eyes to heav'n he cast. Dryden's Æn.
Where are the conscious looks, the face now pale,
Now flushing red, the down-cast bagard eyes,
Or fixt on earth, or slowly rais'd! Smith's Phæd. and Hipp.

HA'GGARD. n. f.

1. Any thing wild or irreclaimable.

I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days pass, which has as long lov'd me
As I have lov'd this proud disdainful haggard. Shakespeare.

2. A species of hawk.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,
And to the South by thy direction fly?
I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the aires, the brancher, the ranieth hawk, and the baggard. Walton's Angler.

3. A hag. So Garth has used it for want of understanding it.

Beneath the gloomy covert of an yew,
In a dark grot, the baleful bagard lay,
Breathing black vengeance, and infecting day. Garth.

HA'GGARDLY. adv. [from haggard.] Deformed; ugly.

For her the rich Arabia sweats her gums,
And precious oils from distant Indies come,
How haggardly her looks at home. Dryd. Juven.

HA'GROSS. n. f. [from bag or back.] A mass of meat, generally pork chopped, and inclosed in a membrane. In Scotland it is commonly made in a sheep's maw of the entrails of the same animal, cut small, with fuet and spices.

HA'GGISH. adj. [from bag.] Of the nature of a hag; deformed; horrid.

as salute of the Latins, or εὐχαι of the Greeks, health be to you.] A term of salutation now used only in poetry; health be to you.

Hail, hail, brave friend!

HAI

Say to the king the knowledge of the broil
As thou did'st leave it. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Her sick head is bound about with clouds:
It does not look as it would have a hail
Or health with'd in it, as on other morns. Len. Johnson.

The angel hail
Bellow'd, the holy salutation us'd Long after to blest Mary, second Eve. Milt. Parad. Lost.

Farewel, happy fields,
Where joy for ever dwells! hail horrors! hail
Infernal world! and thou profoundest hell Receive thy new possessor! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

All hail, he cry'd, thy country's grace and love;
Once first of men below, now first of birds above. Dryd.

Hail to the fun! from whose returning light
The cheerful soldier's arms new lustre take,
To deck the pomp of battle. Rass's Tamarlane.

To HAIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To salute; to call to.

A galley well appointed, with a long boat, drawing near unto the shore, was hailed by a Turk, accompanied with a troop of horsemen. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,
And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.

HA'ILED. adj. [from hail.] Struck with hail.

HA'ILSHOT. n. f. [hail and shot.] Small shot scattered like hail.

dering hailshot, from the pieces mounted towards the top of the building. Hayward.

HA'ILSTONE. n. f. [hail and stone.] A particle or single ball
of hail.

You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the fun. Shakespeare.

Hard hailstones lye not thicker on the plain,
Nor shaken oaks such show'rs of acorns rain. Dryden.

HA'ILY. adj. [from hail.] Consisting of hail.

From whose dark womb a rattling tempest pours,
Which the cold North congeals to haily flowers. Pope.

HAIR. n. f. [hæp, Saxon.]

1. One of the common teguments of the body. It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microscope, we find that they have each a round bulbous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: that each hair consists of five or six others, wraps up in a common tegu-ment or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part near the root thrusting forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow. Quin.

2. A single hair.

My fleece of woolly hair uncurls. Shakespeare. Tit. And.

Shall the difference of hair only, on the skin, be a mark of a different internal constitution between a changeling and a drill? Locke.

Naughty lady,
These hairs which thou do'st ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Much is breeding;
Which, like the courier's hair, hath yet but life,
And not a serpent's poison. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. Any thing proverbially small.

If thou tak'st more
Or less than just a pound; if the scale turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou diest. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

He judges to a hair of little indecencies, and knows better than any man what is not to be written. Dryden.

4. Course; order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction.

Mr. doctor, he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

HA'IRBRAINED. adj. [This should rather be written hæbrained, unconscious, unsettled, wild as a hare.] Wild; iregular; unsteady.

Let's leave this town; for they are hairbrained slaves,
And hunger will enforce them be more eager. Shakespeare. H. VI.

HA'IRBREADTH. n. f. [hair and breadth.] A very small distance; the diameter of a hair.

Seven hundred chosen men left-handed could sling stones at an hairbreadth, and not miss. Julius, xx. 16.

I spoke of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents by flood and field;
Of hairbreadth 'scapes in th' imminent deadly breach. Shak.

HA'IRBEL. n. f. The name of a flower; the hyacinth.

HA'IRCLOTH. n. f. [hair and cloth.] Stuff made of hair, very rough and prickly, worn sometimes in mortification.

who is armed with a halberd.

The dutches appointed him a guard of thirty persons, halberdiers, in a livery of murrey and blue, to attend his person.
Bacon's Henry VII.

The king had only his halberdiers, and fewer of them than used to go with him. Clarendon.

HA'LCYON. n. f. [halcyo, Latin.] A bird, of which it is said that she breeds in the sea, and that there is always a calm during her incubation.

Such smiling rogues, as these, foth ev'ry passion,
Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gale and vary of their matters. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

Amidst our arms as quiet you shall be,
As halcyon brooding on a Winter day. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

HA'LCYON. adj. [from the noun.] Placid; quiet; still; peaceful.

When great Augustus made war's tempests cease,
His halcyon days brought forth the arts of peace. Denham.

HAND, n. f. [hand, hand, Saxon, and in all the Teutonic dialects.]

1. The palm with the fingers; the member with which we hold or use any instrument.

They laid hands upon him, and bound him hand and foot.

So hand in hand they pass'd, the loveliest pair.

That ever since in love's embraces met.

They hand in hand, with wandering steps and flow,

Through Eden took their solitary way.

That wonderful instrument the hand, was it made to be idle?

2. Measure of four inches; a measure used in the matches of horses; a palm.

3. Side, right or left.

For the other side of the court-gate on this hand, and that hand, were hangings of fifteen cubits.

4. Part; quarter; side.

It is allowed on all hands, that the people of England are more corrupt in their morals than any other nation this day under the sun.

5. Ready payment with respect to the receiver.

Of which offer the bawls accepted, receiving in hand one year's tribute.

These two must make our duty very easy; a considerable reward in hand, and the assurance of a far greater recompence hereafter.

6. Ready payment with regard to the payer.

Let not the wages of any man tarry with thee, but give it him out of hand.

7. Rate; price.

Time is the measure of business, as money of wares: business is bought at a dear hand, where there is small dispatch.

8. Terms; conditions.

With simplicity admire and accept the mystery; but at no hand by pride, ignorance, interest, or vanity wrest it to ignoble uses.

It is either an ill sign or an ill effect, and therefore at no hand consistent with humility.

9. Act; deed; external action.

Thou sawest the contradiction between my heart and hand.

10. Labour; act of the hand.

Alas! what was a very idle fellow, that never would set his hand to any business during his father's life.

I rather suspect my own judgment than I can believe a fault to be in that poem, which lay so long under Virgil's correction, and had his last hand put to it.

11. Performance.

Where are these porters,

These lazy knaves? Yave made a fine hand! fellows,

There's a trim rascal let in.

12. Power of performance.

Will Honeycomb has told me, that he had a great mind to try his hand at a Spectator, and that he would fain have one of his writing in my works.

A friend of mine has a very fine hand on the violin.

13. Attempt; undertaking.

Out of them you dare take in hand to lay open the original of such a nation.

14. Manner of gathering or taking.

As her majesty hath received great profit, so may she, by a moderate hand, from time to time reap the like.

15. Workmanship; power or act of manufacturing or making.

An intelligent being, coming out of the hands of infinite perfection, with an aversion or even indifference to be reunited with its Author, the source of its utmost felicity, is such a flock and deformity in the beautiful analogy of things, as is not consistent with finite wisdom and perfection.

16. Manner of acting or performing.

The master saw the madness rise;

His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes;

And while he heav'n and earth defy'd,

Chang'd his hand, and check'd his pride.

17. Agency; part in action.

God must have set a more than ordinary esteem upon that which David was not thought fit to have an hand in.

18. The act of giving or presenting.

Let Tamar dress the meat in my sight, that I may eat it at her hand.

19. To-night the poet's advocate I stand,

And he deserves the favour at my hand.

Act of receiving anything ready to one's hand, when it only waits to be taken.

His power reaches no farther than to compound and divide the materials that are made to his hand; but can do nothing towards the making or destroying one atom of what is already in being.

Many, whose greatness and fortune were not made to their hands, had sufficient qualifications and opportunities of rising to these high posts.

20. Care; necessity of managing.

Jupiter had a farm a long time upon his hands, for want of a tenant to come up to his price.

When a statesman wants a day's defence,

Or envy holds a whole week's war with fence,

Or simple pride for flattery makes demands,

May dunces by dunces be whiffled off my hands.

21. Discharge of duty.

Let it therefore be required, on both parts, at the hands of the clergy, to be in manners of estate like the apostles; at the hands of the laity, to be as they who lived under the apostles.

22. Reach; nearness: as, at hand, within reach, near, approaching.

Your husband is at hand, I hear his trumpet.

Cousins, I hope the days are near at hand.

That chambers will be safe.

He is at hand, and Pindarus is come.

To do you salutation.

The fight of his mind was like some lights of eyes; rather strong at hand than to carry afar off.

Any light thing that moveth, when we find no wind, sheweth a wind at hand.

A very great found near hand hath stricken many deaf.

It is not probable that any body should effect that at a distance, which, nearer hands, it cannot perform.

When mineral or metal is to be generated, nature needs not to have at hand salt, sulphur, and mercury.

23. Manual management.

Nor swords at hand, nor hissing darts afar,

Are doom'd to t'avenge the tedious bloody war.

24. State of being in preparation.

Where is our usual manager of mirth?

What revels are in hand? Is there no play,

To ease the anguish of a torturing hour?

25. State of being in present agitation.

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye;

That lik'd, but had a rougher talk in hand

Than to drive liking to the name of war.

It is indifferent to the matter in hand which way the learned shall determine of it.

26. Cards held at a game.

There was never an hand drawn, that did double the rest of the habitable world, before this; for so a man may term it, if he shall put to account that which may be hereafter, by the occupation and colonizing of those countries.

27. That which is used in opposition to another.

He would dispute,

Confute, change hands, and still confute.

28. Scheme of action.

Consult of your own ways, and think which hand

Is best to take.

They who thought they could never be secure, except the king were first at their mercy, were willing to change the hand in carrying on the war.

29. Advantage; gain; superiority.

The French king, supposing to make his hand by those rude ravages in England, broke off his treaty of peace, and proclaimed hostility.

30. Competition; contest.

She in beauty, education, blood,

Holds hand with any prince of the world.

31. Transmission; conveyance; agency of conveyance.

The salutation by the hand of me Paul.

32. Possession; power.

Sacraments serve as the moral instruments of God to that purpose; the use whereof is in our hands, the effect in his.

And though you war, like petty wrangling states,

You're in my hand; and when I bid you cease,

You shall be crush'd together into peace.

Between the landlord and tenant there must be a quarter of the revenue of the land constantly in their hands.

It is fruitless pains to learn a language, which one may guess by his temper he will wholly neglect, as soon as an approach to manhood, setting him free from a government, shall put him into the hands of his own inclination.

Vegetables Agri were lands taken from the enemy, and distributed amongst the soldiers, or left in the hands of the proprietors under the condition of certain duties.

33. Prefecture of the bridge.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;

But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,

Make gallant show and promise of their mettle.

34. Method of government; discipline; restraint.

Menelaus bare an heavy hand over the citizens, having a malicious mind against his countrymen.

He kept a strict hand on his nobility, and chose rather to advance clergymen and lawyers.

H A N

However strict a hand is to be kept upon all desires of fancy, yet in recreation fancy must be permitted to speak.

35. Influence; management.

Flattery, the dangerous nurse of vice,

Got hand upon his youth, to pleasures bent.

36. That which performs the office of a hand in pointing.

The body, though it moves, yet changing perceivable distance with other bodies, as fast as the ideas of our own minds do naturally follow one another, the thing seems to stand still; as is evident in the hands of clocks and shadows of sundials.

37. Agent; person employed.

The wisest prince, if he can save himself and his people from ruin, under the worst administration, what may not his subjects hope for when he changeth hands, and maketh use of the best?

38. Giver, and receiver.

This tradition is more like to be a notion bred in the mind of man, than transmitted from hand to hand through all generations.

39. An actor; a workman; a soldier.

Your wrongs are known: impose but your commands,

This hour shall bring you twenty thousand hands.

Demetrius appointed the painter guards for his security, pleased that he could preserve that hand from the barbarity and influence of soldiers.

A dictionary containing a natural history requires too many hands, as well as too much time, ever to be hoped for.

40. Catch or reach without choice.

The men of Israel smote as well the men of every city as the beasts, and all that came to hand.

A twy reaper from his tillage brought

First fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf,

Uncull'd as came to hand.

41. Form or cast of writing.

Here is th' indictment of the good lord Hastings,

Which in a few band fairly is engros'd;

Eleven hours I've spent to write it over.

Solyman shew'd him his own letters intercepted, asking him if he knew not that hand, if he knew not that seal.

Being discovered by their knowledge of Mr. Cowley's hand, I happily escaped.

If my debtors do not keep their day,

Deny their hands, and then refuse to pay,

I must attend.

Whether men write court or Roman hand, or any other, there is something peculiar in every one's writing.

The way to teach to write, is to get a plate graved with the characters of such hand you like.

Constantia saw that the hand writing agreed with the contents of the letter.

I present these thoughts in an ill hand; but scholars are bad penmen: we seldom regard the mechanic part of writing.

They were wrote on both sides, and in a small hand.

42. HAND over head. Negligently; rashly; without seeing what one does.

So many strokes of the alarm bell of fear and awaking to other nations, and the facility of the titles, which, hand over head, have served their turn, doth ring the peal so much the louder.

A country fellow got an unlucky tumble from a tree: thus 'tis, says a passenger, when people will be doing things hand over head, without either fear or wit.

43. HAND to HAND. Close fight.

In single opposition, hand to hand,

He did confound the best part of an hour.

He illuses, ere the fight, his dread command,

That flings afar, and points hands hand to hand,

Be banish'd from the field.

44. HAND in HAND. In union; conjointly.

Had the sea been Marlborough's element, the war had been bestowed there, to the advantage of the country, which would then have gone hand in hand with his own.

45. HAND in HAND. Fit; put.

As fair and as good, a kind of hand in hand comparison, had been something too fair and too good for any lady in Britain.

46. HAND to mouth. As want requires.

I can get bread from hand to mouth, and make even at the year's end.

47. To lean in HAND. To keep in expectation; to elude.

A rascally yea forsooth knave, to hear in hand, and then stand upon ye.

48. To be HAND and GLOVE. To be intimate and familiar.

1. To give or transmit with the hand.

Judas was not far off, not only because he dipped in the same dish, but because he was so near that our Saviour could hand the sop unto him.

Reports, like snowballs, gather still the farther they roll; and when I have once handed it to another, how know I how he may improve it?

H A N

I have been shewn a written prophecy that is handed among them with great secrecy.

2. To guide or lead by the hand.

Angels did hand her up, who next God dwell;

For she was of that order whence most fell.

By safe and insensible degrees he will pass from a boy to a man, which is the most hazardous step in life: this therefore should be carefully watched, and a young man with great diligence handed over it.

3. To seize; to lay hands on.

Let him, that makes but trifles of his eyes,

First hand me: on mine own accord, I'll off.

4. To manage; to move with the hand.

'Tis then that with delight I rove

Upon the boundless depth of love:

I bless my chains, I hand my oar,

Nor think on all I left on shore.

5. To transmit in succession; to deliver down from one to another.

They had not only a tradition of it in general, but even of several the most remarkable particular accidents of it likewise, which they handed downwards to the succeeding ages.

I know no other way of securing these monuments, and making them numerous enough to be handed down to future ages.

Arts and sciences consist of scattered theorems and practices, which are handed about amongst the masters, and only revealed to the phi artists, till some great genius appears, who collects these disjointed propositions, and reduces them into a regular system.

One would think a story so fit for age to talk of, and infamy to hear, were incapable of being handed down to us.

HAND is much used in composition for that which is manageable by the hand, as a hand saw; or born in the hand, as a handbarrow.

HAND-BARROW, n. f. A frame on which any thing is carried by the hands of two men, without wheeling on the ground.

A handbarrow, wheelbarrow, shovel and spade.

Set the board whereon the hive standeth on a handbarrow, and carry them to the place you intend.

HAND-BASKET, n. f. A portable basket.

You must have woollen yarn to tie grafts with, and a small handbasket to carry them in.

HAND-BELL, n. f. A bell rung by the hand.

The strength of the percussion is a principal cause of the loudness or softness of sounds; as in ringing of a handbell harder or softer.

HAND-BREADTH, n. f. A space equal to the breadth of the hand; a palm.

A border of an handbreadth round about.

Within were hooks an handbreadth, fastened round about.

The eastern people determined their handbreadth by the breadth of barley-corns, six making a digit, and twenty-four a hand's breadth.

HANDLED, adj. [from hand.]

1. Having the use of the hand left or right.

Many are right handed, whose livers are weakly constituted; and many use the left, in whom that part is strongest.

2. With hands joined.

Into their inmost bow'r

Handed they went.

HANDER, n. f. [from hand.] Transmitter; conveyor in succession.

They would assume, with wondrous art,

Of that vast frame the church; yet grant they were

The handers down, can they from thence infer

A right t'interpret? Or would they alone,

Who brought the present, claim it for their own?

HANDFAST, n. f. [hand and fast.] Hold; custody. Obsolete.

If that shepherd be not in handfast, let him fly.

HANDFUL, n. f. [hand and full.]

1. As much as the hand can gripe or contain.

In the park I saw a country gentleman at the side of Rosamond's pond, pulling a handful of oats out of his pocket, and gathering the ducks about him.

2. A palm; a hand's breadth; four inches.

Take one vessel of silver and another of wood, each full of water, and knap the tongs together about an handful from the bottom, and the found will be more refunding from the vessel of silver than that of wood.

The peaceful seaboard where it dwelt,

For of the lower end two handful

It had devour'd, it was so manifold.

3. A small number or quantity.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows; in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, and in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney, b. ii.

One cried, God bless us! and amen! the other;
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands:
Listening their fear, I could not say amen,
When they did say God bless us. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bowstrings, and the little hangman dare not shoot at him. Shakespeare.
Who makes that noise there? Who are you?
—Your friend, sir, the hangman: you must be so good, sir, to rise, and be put to death. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.

Men do not stand
In so ill case, that God hath with his hand
Sign'd kings blank charters to kill whom they hate;
Nor are they vicars, but hangmen to fate. Donne.

I never knew a critic, who made it his business to lash the faults of other writers, that was not guilty of greater himself; as the hangman is generally a worse malefactor than the criminal that suffers by his hand. Addison's Whig Examiner.

HANK. n. f. [from hank, a chain or coil of rope.]

1. A skein of thread.

2. A tie; a check; an influence. A low word.

HAP

HAP. n. f. [from happ, in Welsh, is misfortune.]

1. Chance; fortune.
Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth but chance to think well of cannot fill have the like hap. Hobbes.

Whether art it were, or heedless hap,
As through the flowing forest rath the fled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. F. 2.
A fox had the hap to fall into the walk of a lion. L'Estr.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.
Curst be good haps, and curst be they that build
Their hopes on haps, and do not make despair
For all these certain blows the furest shield. Sidney.

To have ejected whatsoever that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have pleased some few men, who, having begun such a course themselves, must be glad to see their example followed. Hobbes, b. iv.

3. Accident; casual event; misfortune.
Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Knoles.

Nor feared he among the bands to stray
Of armed men; for often had the seen
The tragick end of many a bloody fray:
Her life had full of haps and hazards been. Fairfax, b. vi.

HAP-BAZARD. n. f. Chance; accident.
The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but so hard that all thum it, and had rather walk as men do in the dark by hap-bazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes for knowledge sake. Hobbes, b. i. f. 7.

We live at hap-bazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. L'Estrange.

We take our principles at hap-bazard upon trust, and without ever having examined them; and then believe a whole system, upon a presumption that they are true. Lacke.

To HAP. v. n. [from the noun.] To come by accident; to fall out; to happen.

It will be too late to gather provision from abroad, for the furnishing of ships or soldiers, which peradventure may need to be presently employed, and whose want may hap to hazard a kingdom. Spenser on Ireland.

And tell my lord and lady what hath hap'd. Shak. Othello.

In destructions by deluge, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant people. Bacon.

HA'PLY. adv. [from hap.]
1. Perhaps; peradventure; it may be.
This love of theirs myself have often seen,
Haply when they have judg'd me fast asleep. Shakespeare.

To warn
Us, haply too secure, of our discharge
From penalty, because from death releas'd
Some days. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Then haply yet your breast remains untouched,
Though that seems strange. Rowe's Royal Convert.

Let us now see what conclusions may be found for instruction of any other state, that may haply labour under the like circumstances. Swift on the Dissent in Athens and Rome.

2. By chance; by accident.
Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest, that swim the ocean stream,
Him haply lumb'ring on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
Deeming some island oft, as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

HA'PLESS. adj. [from hap.] Unhappy; unfortunate; luckless; unlucky.

I come to wive it weathily in Padua: Shakespeare.

If wealthy, then happily in Padua.
Prefer'd by conquest, happily o'erthrown, Waller.

Falling they rise to be with us made one.
Neither is it so trivial an undertaking to make a tragedy end happily; for 'tis more difficult to save than kill. Dryden.

2. Addressfully; gracefully; without labour.
Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. In a state of felicity; as, he lives happily.

4. By chance; peradventure. In this sense happily is written erroneously for haply.

One thing more I shall wish you to desire of them, who happily may persevere these two treatises. Digby.

HA'PPINESS. n. f. [from happy.]
1. Felicity; state in which the desires are satisfied.
Happiness is that estate whereby we attain, so far as possibly may be attained, the full possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired, and containeth in it after an eminent sort the contentation of our desires, the highest degree of all our perfection. Hobbes, b. i.

Oh! happiness of sweet retir'd content,
To be at once secure and innocent. Denham.

The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, argue that the same thing is not good to every man alike: this variety of pursuits shews, that every one does not place his happiness in the same thing. Lacke.

2. Good luck; good fortune.
3. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace.
Certain graces and happinesses peculiar to every language, give life and energy to the words. Denham.

Some beauties yet no precepts can declare;
For there's a happiness as well as care. Pope on Criticism.

HA'PPY. adj. [from hap; as lucky for luck.]
1. In a state of felicity; in a state where the desire is satisfied.
At other end Uran did Strephon lend
Her happy making hand. Sidney.

One gentleman is happy at a reply, and another excels in a rejoinder. Swift.

HA'QUETON. n. f. A piece of armour. Swift.

HARANGUE. n. f. [from harangue, French.] The original of the French word is much questioned: Manage thinks it a corruption of harang, English; Junius imagines it to be disours au rang, to a circle, which the Italian arringa seems to favour. Perhaps it may be from crare, or oratione, orationer, oranger, haranguer. A speech; a popular oration.

Gray-headed men, and grave, with warriors mix'd,
Assamble, and harangues are heard; but soon
In factious opposition. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi.

Nothing can better improve political schoolboys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues, against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine. Swift.

A multitude of preachers neglect method in their harangues. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

HA'RBOR. n. f. [from harbour.] Shelter; entertainment.

Let in us, your king, whose labour'd spirits,
Foreworn in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls. Shaksp. King John.

HARLEQUIN. n. f. [This name is said to have been given by Francis of France to a busy buffoon, in ridicule of his enemy Charles le quint. Monsieur derives it more probably from a famous comedian that frequented M. Harlay's house, whom his friends called Harlequin, little Harley. Trev.] A buffoon who plays tricks to divert the populace; a Jack-pudding; a zani.
The joy of a king for a victory must not be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistress. Dryden.
The man in graver tragick known,
Though his best part long since was done,
Still on the stage desires to tarry;
And he who play'd the harlequin,
After the jest still loads the scene,
Unwilling to retire, though weary. Prior.
HARLOT. n. f. [from harlot, Welsh, a girl. Others for harlet, a little whore. Others from the name of the mother of William the Conqueror. Hurlet is used in Chaucer for a low male drudge.] A whore; a trumpet.
Away, my disposition, and possess me with Some harlot's spirit. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
They help thee by such aids as geese and harlots. Ben Jonson.
The barbarous harlots crowd the public place;
Go, fools, and purchase an unclean embrace. Dryd. Juven.
HARLOTRY. n. f. [from harlot.]
1. The trade of a harlot; fornication.
Nor shall,
From Rome's tribunal, thy harangues prevail
Gainst harlotry, while thou art clad fo thin. Dryd. Juven.
2. A name of contempt for a woman.
A peevish self-will'd harlotry,
That no persuasion can do good upon. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
HARM. n. f. [from harm, Saxon.]
1. Injury; crime; wickedness.
2. Mischief; detriment; hurt.
We, ignorant of ourselves,
Beg often our own harm, which the wise powers Deny us for our good. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.
They should be suffered to write on: it would keep them out of harm's way, and prevent them from evil courses. Swift.
To HARM. v. a. To hurt; to injure.
What sense had I of her stol'n hours or lust?
I saw't not, thought it not, it harm'd not me. Shakespeare. Othello.
Passions ne'er could grow
To harm another, or impeach your rest. Waller.
After

HAR

- After their young are hatched, they brood them under their wings, lest the cold, and sometimes the heat, should harm them. Ray on the Creation.
HARMFUL. adj. [from harm and full.] Hurtful; mischievous; noxious; injurious; detrimental.
His dearly loved squire
His spear of heben-wood behind him bare,
Whose harmful head, thrice heated in the fire,
Had given many a breast with pike-head square. Fa. Queen.
Let no man fear that harmful creature less, because he sees the apostle safe from that poison. Hall.
The earth brought forth fruit and food for man, without any mixture of harmful quality. Raleigh's History.
For flax and oats will burn the tender field,
And deep poppies harmful harvests yield. Dryden's Georg.
HARMFULLY. adv. [from harmful.] Hurtfully; noxiously; detrimentally.
A scholar is better occupied in playing or sleeping, than spending his time not only vainly, but harmfully in such kind of exercise. Asham's Schoolmaster.
HARMFULNESS. n. f. [from harmful.] Hurtfulness; mischievousness; noxiousness.
HARMLESS. adj. [from harm.]
1. Innocent; innoxious; not hurtful.
Touching ceremonies harmless in themselves, and hurtful only in respect of number, was it amiss to decree that those things that were least needful, and newest come, should be the first that were taken away? Hooker, b. iv. f. 14.
She, like harmless lightning, throws her eye
On him, her brothers, me, her master; hitting Each object with a joy. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
2. Unhurt; undamaged.
The shipwright will be careful to gain by his labour, or at least to save himself harmless, and therefore suit his work slightly, according to a slight price. Raleigh's Essays.
HARMLESSLY. adv. [from harmless.] Innocently; without hurt; without crime.
He spent that day free from worldly trouble, harmlessly, and in a recreation that became a churchman. Walton.
Bullets batter the walls which stand inflexible, but fall harmlessly into wood or feathers. Deacy of Piety.
HARMLESSNESS. n. f. [from harmless.] Innocence; freedom from injury or hurt.
When, through tasteless flat humility,
In dough-bak'd men some harmlessness we see,
'Tis but his plegem that's virtuous, and not he. Donne.
Compare the harmlessness, the credulity, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenious pliancy to virtuous counsels, which is in youth untainted, with the mischievousness, the slyness, the craft, the impudence, the falsehood, and the confirmed obliquity in an aged long-practised sinner. South.
HARMONICAL. adj. [from harmonia, French.]
HARMONICK. adj. [from harmonia, French.]
1. Portioned to each other; adapted to each other; concordant; musical.
After every three whole notes, nature requireth, for all harmonical use, one half note to be interposed. Bacon's N. Hist.
Harmonical sounds, and discordant sounds, are both active and positive; but blackness and darkness are, indeed, but privatives. Bacon's Natural History.
So swells each wind-pipe; as intones to ails, Harmonick twang of leather, horn, and brais. Pope.
HARMONIOUS. adj. [from harmonia, French, from harmonia.]
1. Adapted to each other; having the parts proportioned to each other.
All the wide-extended sky,
And all th' harmonious worlds on high,
And Virgil's sacred word shall dye. Cowley.
God has made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us; but it will never come into our heads all at once; we must bring it home piece-meal. Locke.
2. Having sounds concordant to each other; musical.
Harmony in wedded pair,
More grateful than harmonious sounds to th' ear. Milton.
The verse of Chaucer is not harmonious to us: they who lived with him, and some time after him, thought it musical. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
HARMONIOUSLY. adv. [from harmonious.]
1. With just adaptation and proportion of parts to each other.
Not chaos-like, together crush'd and bruis'd;
But as the world, harmoniously confus'd:
Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, they agree. Pope.
That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Musically; with concord of sounds.
If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned, and harmoniously struck, we ought not therefore to worship the instrument, but him that makes the music. Stillington's Def. of Disc. on Rom. Idol.

HAR

- HARMONIOUSNESS. n. f. [from harmonious.] Proportion; musicalness.
To HARMONIZE. v. a. [from harmonia.] To adjust in fit proportions; to make musical.
Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime. Dryden.
HARMONY. n. f. [from harmonia; harmonie, French.]
1. The just adaptation of one part to another.
The pleasures of the eye and ear are but the effects of equality, good proportion, or correspondence; so that equality and correspondence are the causes of harmony. Bacon.
The harmony of things,
As well as that of sounds, from discord springs. Denham.
Sure infinite wisdom must accomplish all its works with consummate harmony, proportion, and regularity. Cheyne.
2. Just proportion of sound; musical concord.
Harmony is a compound idea, made up of different sounds united. Watts's Logic.
3. Concord; correspondent sentiment.
In us both one soul,
Harmony to behold in wedded pair!
More grateful than harmonious sounds to th' ear. Milton.
I no sooner in my heart divin'd
My heart, which by a secret harmony
Still moves with thine, join'd in connexion sweet! Milton.
HARMNESS. n. f. [from harm, French, supposed from tern or hern, Runic; harm, Welsh and Erse, iron.]
1. Armour; defensive furniture of war.
A goodly knight, all dress'd in harmness meet,
That from his head no place appeared to his feet. F. Queen.
Doff thy harmness, youth:
I am to-day i' th' vein of chivalry. Shakespeare. Troil. and Cress.
Of no right, nor colour like to right,
He doth fill fields with harmness. Shakespeare. Henry IV. p. i.
Were I a great man, I should fear to drink:
Great men should drink with harmness on their throats. Shakespeare.
2. The traces of draught horses, particularly of carriages of pleasure or state: of other carriages we say gear.
Or wilt thou ride? Thy horses shall be trapp'd,
Their harmness fludded all with gold and pearl. Shakespeare.
Their steeds around,
Free from their harmness, graze the flow'ry ground. Dryden.
To HARMNESS. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To dress in armour.
He was harmness light, and to the field goes he. Shakespeare.
Full fifty years, harmness d in rugged steel,
I have endur'd the biting Winter's blast. Rave.
2. To fix horses in their traces.
Before the door her iron chariot stood,
All ready harmness for journey new. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Harmness the horses, and get up the horsemen, and stand forth with your helmets. Jer. xlvii. 4.
When I plow my ground, my horse is harmness and chained to my plough. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
To the harmness yoke
They lend their shoulder, and begin their toil. Thomson.
HARP. n. f. [from harp, Saxon; harpe, French.] It is used through both the Teutonic and Roman dialects, and has been long in use.
Romanys, lyra plaudat tibi, Barbarus harpa. Ven. Fort.
1. A lyre; an instrument strung with wire and struck with the finger.
Arion, when through tempests cruel wreck
He forth was thrown into the greedy seas,
Through the sweet music which his harp did make,
Allur'd a dolphin him from death to eat. Spenser.
They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
Nor wanted tuneful harps, nor vocal quire,
The mufes sung, Apollo touch'd the lyre. Dryden.
2. A constellation.
Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies
The shell, as lightest, first begins to rise;
This when sweet Orpheus struck, to lift ning rocks
He fences gave, and ears to wither'd oaks. Creech's Manilus.
To HARP. v. n. [from harp, French, from the noun.]
1. To play on the harp.
I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. Ree.
Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a diffinition in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harp'd. Cor. xiv. 7.
The helmed cherubim,
And sworded seraphim,
Are seen in glitt'ring ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes to heav'n's new-born heir. Milton.
I conceive you harp a little too much upon one string. Collier on Pride.
2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.
Gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
11 A

H A R

For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear. Shaksp. Meas. for Measure.
Macbeth, beware Macduff!
Beware the thane of Fife: dismiss me: enough.
—Whate'er thou art, for thy good caution, thanks:
Thou'lt harp'd my fear aright. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
He seems

Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
HARPER. n. f. [from harp.] A player on the harp.
Never will I trust to speeches penn'd,

Nor to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue;
Nor woe in rhyme, like a blind harper's song. Shakespeare.
I'm the god of the harp: stop, my fairest!—in vain;
Nor the harp, nor the harper, could fetch her again. Tickell.

HARPING. n. f. [from harp, Latin.] A bearded dart with a line fastened to the handle, with which whales are struck and caught.

The boat which on the first assault did go,
Struck with a harping iron the younger foe;
Who, when he felt his side so rudely gor'd,
Loud as the sea that nourish'd him he roar'd. Waller.

HARPONEER. n. f. [harpeur, French, from harpon.] He that throws the harpoon in whale-fishing.

HARPOON. n. f. [harpon, French.] A harping iron.

HARPSICORD. n. f. A musical instrument.

HARPY. n. f. [harpia, Latin; harpie, harpie, French.]

The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and foul long claws, very filthy creatures; which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in,
and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the viands, did so defile the rest that they could not be endured. Religion.
That an harpy is not a centaur is by this way as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle. Locke.

2. A ravenous wretch.

I will do you any ambassage to the pigmies, rather than hold three words conference with this harpy. Shakespeare.

HARQUEBUSS. n. f. [See ARQUEBUSE.] A handgun.

HARQUEBUSSIER. n. f. [from harquebust.] One armed with a arquebus.

About thirty paces off were placed twenty thousand nimble harquebussiers, ranged in length, and but five in a rank. Kneller.

HARRIDAN. n. f. [corrupted from haridelle, a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed trumpet.

She just endur'd the Winter she began,
And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,
To bawd for others, and go shares with punk. Swift.

HARROW. n. f. [harroue, French; harcke, German, a rake.]
A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth, drawn over fowed ground to break the clods and throw the earth over the seed.

The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Is rakes and harrow'd. Dryden's Georgick.

Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To HARROW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break with the harrow.

Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means.
Not only thy peason, but also thy beans. Tuff. Husbandry.
Can't thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow?
or will he harrow the valleys after thee? Job xxxix. 10.

Let the Volcians

Plow Rome, and harrow Italy, I'll never Be such a golling to obey instinct. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

2. To tear up; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres. Sh.
Imagine you behold me bound and scour'd,
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on the rending rack. Roué.

3. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. See HARRY, which in Scottish is the same thing.

As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather. Bacon's Henry VII.

4. To invade; to harass with incursions. [From pergian,
Saxon.]

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy frowne,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre.
Fairy Queen, b. i. cant. 10.

Most glorious Lord of life, that on this day
Did't make thy triumph over death and sin;
And having harrow'd hell, did't bring away
Captivity thence captive, us to win. Spenser's Sonnets.

5. To disturb; to put into commotion. [This should rather be written harry, harer, French.]

Most like: it harrows me with fear and wonder. Shakespeare.

H A R

Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and care. Milton.
Harrow now out and weal away, he cried;
What dismal day hath sent this cur'd light,

To see my lord so deadly damnify'd? Fairy Queen, b. ii.

HARROW. interj. An exclamation of sudden distress. Now
out of use.

HARROWER. n. f. [from harrow.]

1. He who harrows.

2. A kind of hawk. Ansforth.

To HARRY. v. a. [harer, French.]

1. To tease; to harass; to ruffle.

Thou must not take my former sharpness ill.
—I repent me much. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

2. In Scotland it signifies to rob, plunder, or oppress: as, one harried a wife; that is, he took the young away: as also, he harried me out of house and home; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See TO HARROW.

HARSH. adj. [herwische, German, Skinner.]

1. Austere; roughly four.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some forts, when old, continue brisk and fine:
So age's gravity may seem severe,
But nothing harsh or bitter ought t' appear. Drakam.

Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh and salt, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes. Locke.

The same defect of heat which gives a fierceness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of our language, which bears some analogy to the harsh fruit of colder countries. Swift to the Lord High Treasurer.

2. Rough to the ear.

A name unmusical to Volcan ears,
And harsh in found to thine. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Age might, what nature never gives the young;
Have taught the smoothness of thy native tongue;
But satire needs not that, and wit will shine
Through the harsh cadence of a rugged line. Dryden.

The unnecessary consonants made their spelling tedious, and their pronunciation harsh. Dryden.

Thy lord commands thee now
With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,
To serve duties. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 5.

3. Crabbed; morose; peevish.

He was a wife man and an eloquent; but in his nature harsh and haughty. Bacon's Henry VII.

Bear patiently the harsh words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admonishes us of our duty. Taylor.

No harsh reflection let remembrance raise;
Forbear to mention what thou can't not praise. Prior.

A certain quickness of apprehension inclined him to kindle into the first motions of anger; but, for a long time before he died, no one heard an intemperate or harsh word proceed from him. Athenian's Sermon.

4. Rugged to the touch.

Black feels as if you were feeling needles points, or some harsh sand; and red feels very smooth. Boyle on Colours.

5. Unpleasant; rigorous.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the preacher charm'd. Dryd.

HARSHLY. adj. [from harsh.]

1. Sourly; austere to the palate, as unripe fruit.

2. With violence; in opposition to gentleness, unless in the following passage it rather signifies unripe.

'Till, like ripe fruit, thou drop Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

3. Severely; morosely; crabbedly.

I would rather he was a man of a rough temper, that would treat me harshly, than of an effeminate nature. Addison.

4. Ruggedly to the ear.

My wife is in a wayward mood to-day:
I tell you, 'twould sound harshly in her ears. Shakespeare.

Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Grating to harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dangerous lunacy. Shaksp. Hamlet.

A hollow groan, a murmuring wind arose;
The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryd. Fables.

HARSHNESS. n. f. [from harsh.]

1. Sourness; austere taste.

Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard: the rolling doth soften and sweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the smooth distribution of the spirits into the parts; for the unequal distribution of the spirits maketh the harshness. Bacon.

2. Roughness to the ear.

Neither can the natural harshness of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the Italian. Dryden.

Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound? Dryden.

'Tis

H A R

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The found must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.

3. Ruggedness to the touch.

Harshness and ruggedness of bodies is unpleasant to the touch. Bacon's Natural History.

4. Crabbedness; moroseness; peevishness.

No, Regan, you shall never have my curse:
Thy tender-hearted nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort and to harm; to ruffle. Shaksp. King Lear.

HART. n. f. [Saxon.] A he-deer of the large kind;
the male of the roe.

That infant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

The deer
And fearful harts do wander every where Amidst the dogs. May's Virgil's Georg.

HARTSHORN. n. f.

Harshorn is a drug that comes into use as many ways, and under as many forms, as any one in the whole materia medica.
What is used here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This species is the fallow deer; but some tell us, that the medicinal hartshorn should be that of the true hart or stag, called the red deer. The salt of hartshorn is a great sudorific, and the spirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalis: it is used to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the nose, and pouring down some drops of it in water. Hill's Mat. Med.

Ramose concretions of the volatile salts are observable upon the glass of the receiver, whilst the spirits of vapors and hart-horn are drawn. Woodward on Fossils.

HARTSHORN. n. f. An herb.

HART-ROYAL. n. f. A plant. A species of buckthorn plantain.

HARTSTONGUE. n. f. [lingua cervina, Latin.] A plant.

It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moist and shady. There are very few of them in Europe. Miller.

Harstongue is propagated by parting the roots, and also by seed. Mortimer's Husbandry.

HARTWORT. n. f. [tordylium, Latin.] It is an umbelliferous plant, with a rose-shaped flower, consisting of five unequal heart-fashioned petals, which are placed circularly and rest on the empanement, which afterward becomes an almost round fruit, composed of two flat seeds, which easily cast off their covering with a raised border, which are commonly indented.
It is an annual plant, and perishes soon after it has perfected its seed. It is found wild in several parts of England. Miller.

HARVEST. n. f. [harvest, Saxon.]

1. The season of reaping and gathering the corn.

As it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

With harvest work he is worse than he is in the Spring.
L'Estrange.

2. The corn ripened, gathered and inned.

From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd. Shak. H. VI.

When the father is too fondly kind,
Such seed he sows, such harvest shall he find. Dryden.

3. The product of labour.

Let these small cotts and hills suffice:
Let us the harvest of our labour eat;
'Tis labour makes the coarsest diet sweet. Dryden's Juven.

HARVEST-HOME. n. f.

1. The song which the reapers sing at the feast made for having inned the harvest.

Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd;
Come, my boys, come,
Come, my boys, come,
And merrily roar out harvest-home. Dryden's K. Arthur.

2. The time of gathering harvest.

At harvest-home, and on the shearing-day,
When he should thanks to Pan and Pales pay,
And better Ceres, trembling to approach
The little herd. Dryden's Pers. Sat. 4.

3. The opportunity of gathering treasure.

His wife seems to be well favoured: I will use it as the key of the cuckoldy rogue's coffer; and there's my harvest-home.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

HARVEST-LORD. n. f. The head reaper at the harvest.

Grant harvest-lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Tuff. Husbandry.

HARVESTER. n. f. [from harvest.] One who works at the harvest.

HARVESTMAN. n. f. [harvest and man.] A labourer in harvest.

Like to a harvest-mon, that's talk'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

H A S

To HASH. v. n. [hacher, French.] To mince; to chop into small pieces, and mingle.

He rais'd his arm
Above his head, and rain'd a storm
Of blows so terrible and thick,
As if he meant to hash her quick. Hudibras, p. i.

What have they to complain of but too great variety, tho' some of the dishes be not served in the exactest order, and politely; but hashed up in haste. Garth.

HASK. n. f. This seems to signify a cafe or habitation made of rushes or flags.

Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Establish'd bath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes' bask. Spenser's Pastoral.

HA'SLET. n. f. [hasla, Islandick, a bundle; hasterel, haf-HA'SLET. } terau, haster, French.] The heart, liver, and lights of a hog, with the windpipe and part of the throat to it.

HASP. n. f. [hasp, Saxon, whence in some provinces it is yet called hasp.] A clasp folded over a staple, and fastened on with a padlock.

Have doors to open and shut at pleasure, with hasps to them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To HASP. v. n. [from the noun.] To shut with a hasp.

HA'SOCK. n. f. [hasck, German. Skinner.]

1. A thick mat on which men kneel at church.

He found his parishioners very irregular; and in order to make them kneel, and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hassock and common prayer book. Addison.

2. In Scotland it is applied to any thing made of rushes or privet, on which a person may sit: it is therefore probable that hassock and hasp are the same.

HAST. The second person singular of have.

HASTE. n. f. [haste, French; haste, Dutch.]

1. Hurry; speed; nimbleness; precipitation.

Spare him, death!

Let not pity with her tears
Keep such distance from thine ears:
But O, thou wilt not, canst not spare!
Haste hath never time to hear. Craiklaw.

Our lines reform'd, and not compos'd in haste,
Polish'd like marble, would like marble last;
But as the present, so the last age writ;
In both we find like negligence and wit. Waller.

In as much haste as I am, I cannot forbear giving an example. Dryden's Duressy.

The wretched father, running to their aid
With pious haste, but vain, they next invade. Dryden.

2. Passion; vehemence.

I said in my haste, all men are liars. Pf. cxvi. 11.

To HASTE. v. n. [haster, French; hasten, Dutch.]

1. To make haste; to be in a hurry; to be busy; to be speedy.

I have not hasten'd from being a pastor to follow thee. Jer.

2. To move with swiftness.

'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait;
He is a friend. Cinna, where haste you to? Shakespeare.

They were troubled and hasten'd away. Pf. xlviii. 5.

All those things are pass'd away like a shadow, and as a post

 The lifting up of day. Shakespeare, Henry IV. p. ii.
 To HAUNT. v. a. [haunter, French.]
 1. To frequent; to be much about any place or person.
 A man who for his hospitality is so much haunted, that no news stir but come to his ears. Sidney.
 Now we being brought known unto her, the time that we spent in curing some very dangerous wounds, after once we were acquainted, and acquainted we were sooner than ourselves expected, the continually almost haunted us. Sidney.
 I do haunt thee in the battle thus,
 Because some tell me that thou art a king. Shak. Hen. IV.
 She this dangerous forest haunts,
 And in sad accents utters her complaints. Waller.
 Earth now
 Secur'd like to heav'n, a feat where gods might dwell,
 Or wander with delight, and love to haunt
 Her sacred shades. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
 Celestial Venus haunts Idalia's groves;
 Diana Cynthus, Ceres Hybla loves. Pope's Spring.
 2. It is used frequently in an ill sense of one that comes unwelcome.
 You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house;
 I told you, sir, my daughter is dispos'd of. Shakespeare.
 Oh, could I see my country-foet!
 There leaning near a gentle brook,
 Sleep, or peruse some ancient book;
 And there in sweet oblivion drown
 Those cares that haunt the court and town. Swift.
 3. It is eminently used of apparitions or spectres that appear in a particular place. Foul

H A W

Foul spirits haunt my resting place. Fairfax.
 And ghastly visions break my sleep by night.
 All these the woes of Oedipus have known,
 Your fates, your furies, and your haunted town. Pope.
 To HAUNT. v. n. To be much about; to appear frequently.
 I've charged thee not to haunt about my doors:
 In honest plainness thou hast heard me say,
 My daughter's not for thee. Shakespeare's Othello.
 Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd
 The air is delicate. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 HAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Place in which one is frequently found.
 We set toils, nets, gins, snares and traps for beasts and birds in their own haunts and walks, and without any fear of faith and confidence.
 To me pertains not, the replies,
 To know or care where Cupid flies;
 What are his haunts, or which his way,
 Where he would dwell, or whither stray. Prior.
 A scene where, if a god should cast his sight,
 A god might gaze and wonder with delight!
 Joy touch'd the messenger of heav'n; he stay'd Entranc'd, and all the blissful haunt survey'd. Pope's Odyssey.
 2. Habit of being in a certain place.
 The haunt you have got about the courts will one day or another bring your family to beggary. Arbutnot, John Bull.
 HAUNTER. n. f. [from haunt.] Frequent; one that is often found in any place.
 The ancient Grecians were an ingenious people, of whom the vulgar sort, such as were haunters of theatres, took pleasure in the conceits of Aristophanes. Wotton on Education.

 HA'WTHORN. n. f. [haw Saxon, Saxon] A species of medlar; the thorn that bears haws.
 The great use to which it is applied in England is to make hedges and fences; and there are two or three varieties of it about London; but that sort which produces the smallest leaves is preferable, because its branches always grow close together. Miller.

H A Y

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles. Shak. As you like it.
 The hawthorn fly is all black, and not big. Waller's Angler.
 Some in their hands, beside the lance and shield,
 The boughs of woodbine, or of hawthorn held. Dryden.
 Now hawthorn blossom, now the daisies spring. Pope.
 The hawthorn whitens, and the juicy groves
 Put forth their buds. Thomson's Spring.
 To HAW. v. n. [Perhaps corrupted from hawk or hock.] To speak slowly with frequent intermission and hesitation.
 'Tis a great way; but yet, after a little humming and hawing upon t, he agreed to undertake the job. L'Estrange.
 HAWK. n. f. [habez, Welsh; harpoc, Saxon.]
 1. A bird of prey, used much anciently in sport to catch other birds.
 Do'st thou love hawking? Thou hast hawks will fear
 Above the morning lark. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
 It can be no more disgrace to a great lord to draw a fair picture, than to cut his hawk's meat. Peacocks on Drawing.
 Whence borne on liquid wing
 The founding culver shoots; or where the hawk,
 High in the beetling cliff, his airy builds. Thomson's Spring.
 2. [Hach, Welsh.] An effort to force phlegm up the throat.
 To HAWK. v. n. [from hawk.]
 1. To fly hawks at fowls; to catch birds by means of a hawk.
 'Tis his highness' pleasure
 You do prepare to ride unto St. Alban's,
 Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawk. Shakespeare.
 Do'st thou love hawking? Thou hast hawks will fear
 Above the morning lark. Shakespeare.
 One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking and hunting. Locke.
 He that hawks at larks and sparrows has no less sport, though a much less considerable quarry, than he that flies at nobler game. Locke.
 A false Henry is, when Emma hawks;
 With her of tarsels and of lures he talks. Prior.
 2. To fly at; to attack on the wing.
 A falcon tow'ring in her pride of place,
 Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at and kill'd. Shakespeare, Macb.
 Whether upward to the moon they go,
 Or dream the Winter out in caves below,
 Or hawk at flies elsewhere, concerns us not to know. Dry.
 3. [Hach, Welsh.] To force up phlegm with a noise.
 Come, sit, sit, and a song.—Shall we clap into't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which are the only prologues to a bad voice. Shakespeare.
 She complained of a soreness of her throat, and of a stinking tough phlegm which the hawk'd up in the mornings. Wise's Surgery.
 Blood, cast out of the throat or windpipe, is spit out with a hawking or small cough; that out of the gums is spit out without hawking, coughing, or vomiting. Harvey on Conjecture.
 4. To tell by proclaiming it in the streets. [From hawk, German, a falseman.]
 His works were hawk'd in every street;
 But seldom rose above a sheet. Swift.
 HA'WKED. adj. [from hawk.] Formed like a hawk's bill.
 Flat noses seem comely unto the Moor, an aquiline or hawk'd one unto the Persian, a large and prominent nose unto the Roman. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
 HA'WKER. n. f. [from hawk, German.] One who sells his wares by proclaiming them in the street.
 I saw my labours, which had cost me so much thought and watching, bawled about by common hawkers, which I once intended for the weighty consideration of the greatest person. Swift's Vindication of Isaac Bickerstaff.
 To grace this honour'd day the queen proclaims,
 By herald hawkers, high heroic games:
 She summons all her sons; an endless band
 Pours forth, and leaves unpeopled half the land. Pope.
 HA'WKWEED. n. f.
 The characters are: the stalks are branched and slender, the leaves produced alternately, and the flower consists of many leaves placed in an orbicular order, and open in form of a marigold: the seeds are slender and angular, or furrowed: the whole plant hath a milky juice. HAZ

Or if the earlier season lead
To the tann'd bay cock in the mead.
Bring them for food sweet boughs and ofians cut,
Nor all the Winter long thy bay rick shut.
Some turners turn long and slender sprigs of ivory, as small as an hay stalk,
The best manure for meadows is the bottom of hay mows and hay stacks.
Hay and oats, in the management of a groom, will make ale.
By some hay cock, or some shady thorn,
He bids his beads both even song and morn.
Blouzclinda, in a gamefome mood,
Behind a hay cock loudly laughing food.
The hum of bees inviting sleep sincere,
Into the guileless breast, beneath the shade,
Or thrown at large amid' the fragrant hay. Thomf. Autumn.
To dance the HAY. To dance in a ring: probably from dancing round a hay cock.
I will play on the tabor to the worthies,
And let them dance the bay. Shakefp. Love's Labour Lost.
This maids think on the hearth they see,
When fires well nigh consumed be,
There dancing bays by two and three,
Just as your fancy calls them. Drayton's Nymphid.
The gum and glitt'ning, which with art
And study's method, in each part
Hangs down the heart,
Looks just as if that day,
Snails there had crawl'd the bay. Suckling.
HAY. n. f. [from hais, French, a hedge.] A net which incloses the haunt of an animal.
Coneys are destroyed by bays, curs, spaniels, or tumblers bred up for that purpose. Mortimer's Husbandry.
HAYMAKER. n. f. [bay and make.] One employed in drying grafs for hay.
As to the return of his health and vigour, were you here, you might enquire of his haymakers. Pope to Swift.
HA'ZARD. n. f. [hazard, French; azar, Spanish; haffi, Ru-nick, danger.]
1. Chance; accident; fortuitous hap.
I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die. Shakefp. Rich. III.
I will upon all hazards well believe
Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well. Shak.
Where the mind does not perceive this connection, there mens opinions are not the product of judgment, but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction. Lodge.
2. Danger; chance of danger.
We are bound to yield unto our Creator, the father of all mercy, eternal thanks, for that he hath delivered his law unto the world; a law wherein so many things are laid open, as a light which otherwise would have been buried in darkness, not without the hazard, or rather not with the hazard, but with the certain loss of thousands of souls, most undoubtedly now saved. Hooker, b. i.
The hazard I have run to see you here, should inform you that I love not at a common rate. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Men are led on from one stage of life to another in a condition of the utmost hazard, and yet without the least apprehension of their danger. Rogers's Sermons.
3. A game at dice.
The duke playing at hazard at the groom-porter's, in much company, held in a great many hands together, and drew a huge heap of gold. Swift.
To HA'ZARD. v. a. [hazard, French.] To expose to chance;
to put into danger.
They might, by persisting in the extremity of that opinion, hazard greatly their own estates, and so weaken that part which their places now give. Milner, l. v.
It was not in his power to adventure upon his own fortune, or bearing a public charge to hazard himself against a man of private condition. Hayward.
To HA'ZARD. v. n.
1. To try the chance.
I pray you tarry; pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,
I lose your company. Shakefp. Merchant of Venice.
2. To adventure.
She from her fellow-provinces would go,
Rather than hazard to have you her foe. Waller.
HAZARDABLE. adj. [from hazard.] Venturesome; liable to chance.
An hazardable determination it is, unto fluctuating and indis-
ferent effects, to affix a positive type or period. Brown.
HAZARDER. n. f. [from hazard.] He who hazards.
HAZARDRY. n. f. [from hazard.] Temerity; precipitation; rash adventurousness. Obsolete.

fruit on the same tree; the nuts grow in clusters, and are closely joined together at the bottom, each being covered with an outward hulk or cup, which opens at the top, and when the fruit is ripe it falls out: the leaves are roundish and intire.
The species are hazelnut, cobnut, and filbert. The red and white filberts are mostly esteemed for their fruit. Miller.
Kate, like the hazel twig,
Is straight and slender; and as brown in hue
As hazel nuts, and sweeter than the kernels. Shakefp. As You Like It.
Her chariot is an empty hazel nut. Shak. Rem. and Jul.
Why fit we not beneath the grateful shade,
Which hazels, intermix'd with elms, have made? Dryden.
There are some from the size of a hazel nut to that of a man's fist. Woodward on Fossils.

 To HEAR. v. n. [pyran, Saxon; hoeren, Dutch.]
 1. To enjoy the sense by which sounds are distinguished.
 Sound is nothing but a certain modulation of the external air, which, being gathered by the external ear, beats, as is supposed, upon the membrana tympani, which moves the four little bones in the tympanum: in like manner as it is beat by the external air, these little bones move the internal air which is in the tympanum and vestibulum; which internal air makes an impression upon the auditory nerve in the labyrinth and cochlea, according as it is moved by the little bones in the tympanum: so that, according to the various reflexions of the external air, the internal air makes various impressions upon the auditory nerve, the immediate organ of hearing; and these different impressions represent different sounds. Quincy.
 The object of hearing is sound, whose variety is so great, that it brings in admirable store of intelligence. Holder.
 2. To listen; to hearken.
 Since 'tis your command, what you so well
 Are pleas'd to hear, I cannot grieve to tell. Denham.

HEAT. n. f. [heat, heat, Saxon; heats, Danish.]

1. The sensation caused by the approach or touch of fire.

Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object, which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot; so what in our sensation is heat, in the object is nothing but motion. Locke.

The word heat is used to signify the sensation we have when we are near the fire, as well as the cause of that sensation, which is in the fire itself; and thence we conclude, that there is a sort of heat in the fire resembling our own sensation:

whereas in the fire there is nothing but little particles of matter, of such particular shapes as are fitted to impress such motions on our flesh as excite the sense of heat. Watts.

2. The cause of the sensation of burning.

The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burn by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hobbes, b. v.

After they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats which are there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to begin the custom of going naked.

Bacon's New Atlantis.

3. Hot weather.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;

The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;

Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

The pope would not comply with the proposal, as fearing the heats might advance too far before they had finished their work, and produce a pestilence among the people. Addison.

4. State of any body under the action of the fire.

The heats smiths take of their iron are a blood-red heat, a white flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat. Moxon.

5. One violent action unintermitted.

The continual agitations of the spirits must needs be a weakening of any constitution, especially in age; and many causes are required for refreshment betwixt the heats. Dryden.

6. The state of being once hot.

I'll strike my fortune with him at a heat,

And give him not the leisure to forget. Dryden's Aurengz.

7. A course at a race, between each of which courses there is

HECTICK. } adj. [hectique, French, from ἥξις.]
1. Habitual; constitutional.
This word is joined only to that kind of fever which is slow and continual, and ending in a consumption, is the contrary to those fevers which arise from a plethora, or too great fulness from obstruction, because it is attended with too lax a state of the excretory passages, and generally those of the skin; whereby so much runs off as leaves not resistance enough in the contractile vessels to keep them sufficiently distended, so that they vibrate oftener, agitate the fluids the more, and keep them thin and hot. Quincy.
A hectic fever hath got hold
Of the whole substance, not to be controul'd. Donne.
